Meanwhile let us hammer furnish the news from Rural Dell, but the truths home that we have preached for 25 years.

It was our good fortune and pleasure to meet three of the most prominent men in the people's party, including its honored chairman, Henry E. Thiessen, who insisted first on our remaining for supper, as he expressed it, "so we can have a good talk on the political situation generally." Mr. Thiessen, when asked for his opinion, said that his letter to the Independent covered about all Grandfather and Grandmother Samphe had to say on the subject. "There are men in Clackamas county who have worked early and late, spent time, money and labor for the people's cause and who have scarcely been consulted in material matters." He thought the common serse method to pursue in fu-He said in case he had some grain to ture is to get the very best material cut he would have it ready, but it begins to look very doubtful if the grain available from all parts of the county. From Mr. Thiessen's it was but a short walk to the Oatfield farm, where we found the modern Priam surrounded by his sturdy young sons. Mr. Oatfield has a large and fertile tract, which requires his constant care and attention with the assistance of a large and industrious family. "Those who suppose for a moment that there is a profit in farming," said Mr. Oatfield, "are wholly mistaken.
