The Seventh street bakery building caught on fire Friday morning through the heat communicating from the oven to the woodwork. The entire structure seemed destined to go up in flames for awhile, but the well directed efforts of the fire department saved it. There was no insurance on either the building or stock. County Recorder Tom P. Randall, chairman of the soliciting committee for the reception to the Volunteers, states that the committee will soon be prepared to call on the people for contributions, and asks them to save their spare money for this laudable purpose. Next Monday there will be a game of baseball between the court house and city officials at Gladstone park for the benefit of the reception fund. Each player will contribute $1 to the fund, and spectators will be charged 10 cents admission at the gate. The business houses will probably be asked to close next Monday afternoon, so that everybody can attend the ball game.

George Brown, of New Era, said that there had not been a year since he was in business, but what it paid to raise and ship potatoes. Mr. Brown owns a warehouse and has raised, bought and shipped potatoes for a number of years, and was the first grower in Clackamas county to begin the practice of grading potatoes. He discovered that it paid, and paid well. Many buyers wanted small potatoes for different purposes. Some restaurants and hotels wanted small potatoes to cook with the jackets on; planters in California wanted them for seed, and shippers wanted them for the South American market. There is also a good demand for large potatoes of a uniform size. Consequently, graded potatoes bring the top price in the market. Mr. Brown first induced his neighbors to grade their potatoes, and graded all that were brought to him for shipment. As a result, the people of that section now all grade their product, and New Era potatoes stand high in the San Francisco market.
