A Symposium.

The Ashland Tidings, one of the most conservative papers in this state, contained the following paragraph:

"Sam Jones' coarse style, which approaches too near the vulgar to suit the average audience of intelligent people on the Pacific coast, at least, is what has given him notoriety and perforce made him a drawing card on the lecture platform. But once, ought to be often enough to satisfy the curiosity of any community and it is to be hoped that the Chautauqua managers of this coast will be as well satisfied as the public with a single visit, and allow Sam to stay on the other side of the Rocky mountains in the future. The Pacific coast is too far along in civilization to need his ministrations."

It seems strange in this afternoon of the nineteenth century, such a man as Jones can get invited to deliver addresses before an assembly, such as the Chautauqua society is composed of. Seemingly a man can say anything under the cloak of religion, and he escapes press criticism on account of offending some church. That Sam Jones is a disciple of the Devil and his works, is clearly proven by his vicious attacks on the public schools of the country, at Oregon City. A large number of his audience left the building and refused to listen further to Sam's ribaldry. But no doubt Jones will flourish so long as he uses religion as a cloak for his vulgar, objectionable and abusive for our educational institutions.—Eugene Guard.

Sam Jones has gotten his pay and left Oregon, leaving his slang behind. He is the coarsest blatherskite who is allowed to talk to an American audience. If a decent minister were to use the vulgar, objectionable language he employs, he would be kicked out of the pulpit, and yet people go and hear Jones and think they have received a treat. It is more of a circus. Jones says some splendid things with his vulgarity, and is no doubt unique and entertaining, but if his style is the proper one then the ministers of the country had better adopt it for it draws the crowd.—Albany Democrat.

The Statesman thinks the editors who have criticized Sam Jones are afflicted with "muck mcdesty." Indeed! The Statesman man probably belongs to the crowd who delight to listen to smutty stories told in public or private. Such people have unfortunately allowed their minds to become diseased, so that the more vulgarity and coarseness exhibited by traveling fakirs like Sam Jones, the better they like it. The latter class is always expected to object to anything like a criticism of the unrefined and the vulgar.

Professor William Scott was a visitor at the Chautauqua assembly most of the session last week. He went down to play ball with the Y. M. C. A.'s of Portland, but was not permitted to play on the score of non-professionalism. He says De Witt Miller's lecture was far better than Sam Jones, in his judgment. He describes Sam as always preceding his shafts of invective by hiding his face with his hands and chuckling in his sleeve.—McMinnville Reporter.

Sam Jones, the so-called great evangelist, lectured at Oregon City and Ashland last week, and if the daily papers reported him correctly, he is a wishy-washy preacher at best. His "lectures" consisted of silly platitudes and old chestnutty yarns in which Jones generally figured as the hero; and some of his assertions showed him to be on the ragged edge of lunacy. For instance, what other condition of mind than lunacy could inspire the statement made at Oregon City by Sam that beauty was dangerous in a woman, and that if he had an exquisitely beautiful daughter he would pray God that she might have the smallpox. Rotten, indeed must be the mind and empty the pate of the nincompoop who cannot conceive of a beautiful woman as being good and pure and true, and it is a pity indeed that the Chautauqua societies of Oregon, supposed to be promoters of moral as well as intellectual culture, should have been the instrument of bringing this creature, devoid of both, so prominently before the people of this state.—Fossil Journal.

Rev. Sam Jones is the biggest blatter that has escaped from the Atlantic Seaboard in a dozen decades. He is a slang slinger from "way back." He is not an orator, he is not a minister of the gospel, he is a roaring farce evangelizing for cash. He is vulgar and almost obscene. He is cross and garnished with brummagen and prunella. He is a rough and tumble pulpist clown. He brings religion into contempt and would do as much good as a bar room entertainer as he can as an alleged preacher. Years ago Jones was a novelty and the prurient ever seeking new sensations went to hear him. One dose was enough to give a sick cat the mal de mir. Jones goes up and down the country prospecting for new places to relocate Hades. He has located Purgatory "just a mile from" more than a hundred different towns. He locates it in or near every hamlet or city he goes to. He has so many different openings into the nether world that the subterranean pilot can get out of this wicked country in a hurry if he wants to and never miss a date. Dante wouldn't be in it with Jones as an opening attraction in the realm of the Bottomless Pit. He succeeds where he is but little known. One harangue is usually enough to satisfy the most fastidious.

He is a good drawing card for the first time, but the frost is on the pumpkin and the fodder's in the shock when he scores for the second heat, as a rule. Some people can stand more of him than others care to stand.—N. W. Herald.

John W. Rowen Dead.

DIED—In Des Moines, at 11 p. m. July 30, John W. Rowen, aged 46 years. Mr Rowen had been ill for eighteen months and had spent most of the time traveling in search of health. He was hopeful in the struggle, and a complaining word was never heard from his lips. He was a good man and he died peacefully and bravely, accepting the decree, nor protesting except for his family's sake. He idolized his wife and daughter, just entering young womanhood, who are left to mourn his untimely death.

Mr. Rowen was born in Elizabeth, N. J., November 22, 1852. When he was 5 years old his parents removed to Valparaiso, Indiana, and about thirty years ago the family removed to Des Moines. Later his parents removed to Oregon, where they now reside. Besides them he leaves in his immediate family two sisters and three brothers, Mrs. Nellie M. Cooper, Miss Jennie E. Rowen and Harry V. Rowen, living with their parents in Oregon; A. L. Rowen, editing a newspaper at Earlham, Iowa, and James D. Rowen, who is a resident of Des Moines.

Mr. Rowen was engaged for eighteen years with Mills & Co., printers of this city, working from the bottom to the top of the business. Afterwards he was a member of the Iowa Printing Company, which bought the business. Until his illness he was employed as Iowa agent for the American Type Foundry Company, of Chicago, and was a very valuable employe. He traveled over the entire state and was very popular. He was a member of the Iowa State Traveling Men's Association.

About eighteen months ago he was taken with consumption, and soon afterward, under the advice of doctors, went to Phoenix, Ariz., where he was somewhat improved for a time. He then went to Colorado and spent months in Pueblo, Manitou and Colorado Springs, but was unable to find that which he sought. He returned home a few weeks ago but yet everything was done for him that the tender heart of wife and the loving affection of friends could suggest.

Mr. Rowen was married September 1, 1880, to Miss Emma Brown, of this city. Mrs. Rowen and their one daughter, Miss Grace, aged 18, are left in the darkened home.

The funeral will be held at 4 o'clock today from the family residence at 1202 Grand Avenue. Dr. A. L. Frisbie will conduct the services. The pallbearers will be Webb Sours, Philo Kenyon, Clayton Rhoades, Newton Rhoades, Andrew Paul and Dr. Kelleher.—Iowa State Register, Aug. 1.

Mr. T. W. Clark, of the woolen mills, informs us that everything now looks bright and promising toward active and steady operations by the mills. A great many valuable orders are now in hand, more employes are now being put to work and the mills will soon be running full capacity. Last Monday all accounts were settled and hereafter a regular monthly pay day will be instituted. The woolen mills are an important factor to the business welfare of Bandon and we are pleased to note that everything looks promising for the industry.—Bandon Recorder.
