A Portland exchange says that the $1,000 opera wrap worn by Nance O'Neil, and so much admired by a number of Oregon City, cost only $175. This paper says that the wrap was held at $200 by the Portland dealer, but that he sold it at a discount of $25.

The Southern Pacific will soon have four crews of 150 men each, employed in graveling the roadbed between Willamette and Salem. The Rochester steam dumpers will be used and the gravel distributed between and on each side of the rails automatically from the car. One crew are already at work between Aurora and Hubbard. The increasing traffic and heavy trains are hard on the dirt roadbed in places.

It is busy times in the United States land office these days. From two to four original homestead entries are being filed daily, and timber land applications and final proofs are numerous. It is the first time in ten years that there has been such a rush of business at the land office. The increasing value of timber is creating a demand for the thousands of acres of desirable forest lands in Western Oregon.

C. E. Moulton, of the land department of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company at Tacoma, was here during the forepart of the week gathering statistics concerning government and railroad lands. This information and statistics will be used as advertising matter for some new maps to be issued by the company and sent East as an inducement for immigration to come West.

A young man aged about 19, accompanied by his prospective father-in-law and mother-in-law walked into the county clerk's office Monday, and accosted Deputy Cooper as follows: "Is this the place where they keep marriage licenses?" Upon being answered in the affirmative, he responded, "I want a pair." The young man was accommodated as soon as his consent papers were filed.

Ex-County Judge Hayes, who is agent for the state board of school land commissioners, says that they have plenty of money to loan at six per cent, but there are few takers. This indicates that money is plentiful, and that but few are borrowing.

A meeting of the board of government engineers appointed to investigate the advisability of purchasing the locks here, held a meeting in Portland Monday evening to hear testimony for and against the condemnation proposition. After all the testimony appeared to be in. Major Heiner, who presided, asked: "Has any person anything to say why the locks at Oregon City should not be purchased by the United States government?" No protest being offered, Major Heiner declared the hearing adjourned. Henry B. Thielson, secretary of the Salem chamber of commerce, presented figures showing that free locks meant a saving of $250,000 to a population of 141,000, that would be affected in the Willamette valley, exclusive of Multnomah county. Congressman Tongue was present to champion the cause of condemnation and purchase. Representatives were present from the Portland General Electric Company; also legal representatives of the Willamette Pulp & Paper Company, who asked that their rights might not be impaired by any action taken by the United States.
