New Features and Improvements—A Model Organization.

One of the neatest and most cheerful places in Oregon City to pass away the leisure hours, is the Y. M. C. A. rooms on Main street, opposite the Congregational church. A. M. Grilley, the new secretary, has inaugurated a degree of improvement, and added new features, that make it a model institution. The reading rooms are tastefully arranged, and are well supplied with books and papers. Facilities have been added to the bathing department, and new apparatus has been placed in the gymnasium. A literary and debating society has been organized, to which active and social members are entitled to membership. Those not members of the Association can become members of the literary society upon the payment of a small fee. The night classes are a profitable feature and offer superior inducements for intellectual improvement at a minimum cost. Book-keeping, arithmetic, grammar, singing and spelling are the branches taught. The members of the physical classes are given free examination by a physician and furnished with an anthropometric chart. A new medicine ball weighing 12 pounds has been added to the equipments. Indoor and basket ball are now receiving marked attention, and some interesting contests are planned. Rev. A. J. Montgomery addressed a large audience Sunday afternoon against the policy of setting Polygamist Roberts in congress. The sentiments expressed were universally endorsed. Last Saturday night the literary and debating society elected the following officers: President, Elvy Stipp; Vice-president, Dr. O. S. Seaman; secretary, Arthur Holden; treasurer, James McIntyre; executive committee, A. S. Dresser, C. Schuebel and O. U. Wilson; sergeant-at-arms, Harry Scroggs.
