KRAUSSE BROS.

A provincial Frenchman, Mr. Ponthichot, burdened with a marriageable daughter and an over-vigilant wife, takes up his residence in Paris. He is tired of the routine of domesticity and is anxious to get an insight into Bohemian city life. Therefore, he makes it a condition of his daughter's betrethal that his future son-in-law must have an uncertain past, and, that he, the father, must break off the entanglement. He hopes by this means to replace the sonin-law in the affections of the other Countryman in the City.

Kaphael, the prospective son-in-law, however, has led an exemplary life and, to win Pontbichot's daughter, is forced to call to his aid a modiste, whom he dces not know, but who occupies an apartment next to his own. This woman enters into conspiracy. She is admired. however, by a lion-tamer and a friend of Pontbichot. Pontbichot at the outset of his gay lite falls into their clutches. It is from this predicament that the complications arise. Pontbichot is sent home by express dressed in pajamas and locked in a cupboard. His taste for gav life suddenly disappears, and he goes back to the provinces wiser and more contented with his lot.

The amusing situations commence immediately upon the rise of the curtain and are accompanied by roars of laughter, which convulses the audience until the final curtain.

ROSES AND RUE.

- I sit in the shadow alone, sweetheart, Your roses are seenting the air,
  And I dream of our love troth long ago
  bown in the garden there.
  Marigolds, hellyhocks, prince's feather,
  Bowed low in the dim, soft light,
  As under the willow tree by the gate
  I kissed you and said, "Good night."
- Ab sweetheart mine, with the pale, mute Bps. An, sweetheart mine, with the pale, mute lips, We have had our measure of rue;
  The clouds were dark and the skies were tair,
  But you forever were true.
  And now as I sit in the dark alone
  I would give the world to know
- The way through the years to that faroff field Where simples for heartache grow.
- Love fades, they say, when the pulse is old, And I am threescore and ten,
  But what I have learned with its bitter loss
  Lies far beyond their ken;
  For tomorrow they hide you away, sweetheart,
  In the graveyard out of my sight,
  So I heap the roses—God's roses—round you
  And kiss you and say, "Good night."

ONERHANDERHANDERHANNERHANN The Three O'Clock Man

A Ghost That Was Banished by Canadanananananananananananananan

Carl Westerly left the office at a quarter to 3 o'clock. There seemed not to be the remotest danger of an extra that night, and the telegraph man had long since sent in his "30." For some reason or other Westerly was more than ordinarily tired. Perhaps it was his spirit that was weary. He was tired of the endless and relentless grind of newspaper work, tired of the newspaper point of view, tired of the whole round of life. He wondered if men who had a home knew how blessed they were and thought, with distaste, of his dismal room, where his thoughts alone kept him company. It was an uninviting room, as any one who saw it must have confessed, for Westerly did not have the trick of domesticating himself as some bachelors do. He was a bachelor indeed. He had always lived in a womanless sort of way. Sometimes it came across him that he was missing the best part of his life in knowing nothing of them, but he was shy and reverent, and it appeared to be his lot to dwell alone and envy other men. So, what with loneliness and overwork and ennul, he was not at his best on this particular night. No car was in sight, and he concluded that he had just missed the hourly horse car which took belated workers homeward after the cable had ceased its buzzing for the day; so he started out to walk. He loitered for a time, half hoping some vehicle might come in sight, but the streets seemed deserted. So, after pausing a moment to admire the sinister picturesqueness of the Chicago river, with the lights gleaming upon its murky waters from masthead and high window, he started to cross the bridge. A distant clock struck 3, and Westerly, aroused by it from his reverie, looked up to see a man just before him-a man who seemed to have come up out of the solid planks of the bridge. He wore a hat well back on his head and showed a long, horselike face, with a hooked nose and one blind eye. About worn with a noticeable negligence.

It seemed to him that if, by any chance, thing the baby did was perfect, but, that man were to touch him he would faint. He moved as far away from him as the limits of the footnath would permit, and passed him hastily, a coldness stealing along his veins as he did The man merely smiled in a sardonle fashion, lifting the eyebrow of the blind eye and dropping one corner absolution. of his mouth. It was an indescribable smirk and filled Westerly with aver-

Actually it seemed to him that he must shrick —now promise me you won't, mamma—send her away!"—New York Sun. aloud for protection from this silent man. But he controlled himself and went to bed and slept-after a time.

The next night he confessed to some apprehension as he approached the habitants of any country? Surely it bridge, and he looked out anxiously for must be that described by our consul his dread companion of the night before. He was not to be seen anywhere. But at about the center of the he grinned. Again he followed Westererly to his house and again he stood months. If by any chance the young editor went home later or earlier than another fortnight the 4,800 miles to 3, he had the privilege of going his way Cape Town. It thus needs fully a alone, but if the hour was 3 the man was there, watchful and sardonic and thought of addressing him, but whenever he strove to do so his tongue clove to the roof of his mouth. He evaded him at times by changing the hour of his homegoing or by riding on the street car, but somehow he was insistently drawn back to the bridge and the Three o'Clock Man, as be denominnted him. He sometimes wondered if he would see the man upon the bridge if he were to pass in a car, but as no car went at that hour be was

Ir chanced that better times came to Westerly and that they came quite suddenly. He was given a more satisfactory position, which would involve a pleasing change of hours, and he also discovered that Elsa Sessions, the girl who did the book reviews and who had eyes several degrees bluer than the Italian heavens, was not averse to his society. But there is no need to go into that. The point is, he found out these two gratifying matters in one day and, walking home in a state of considerable exultation, noticed the Three o'Clock Man with less impa-

"Our acquaintance is ended, my uncanny friend," he thought. "Tomorrow you may keep tryst, but I will not. I will walk abroad at Christian hours and leave you to your unholy habits." Thinking these things, he passed the ereature, and it seemed to him that the smirk on his face was even more than usually offensive.

So sure was he that the unwelcome acquaintance with this man was over that he did not even look from his window that night to see if he were watching, but, putting out his light, threw himself in his bed with more of happiness in his mood than he had known for years. He fell into a light slumber, from which he was aroused by the Impression that some one was looking at him. He opened his eyes and stared into the gloom, a gloom not a little mitigated by a street lamp across the street, which, owing to the lifted shade, shone clearly into the room.

The feeling that some one was looking at him grew to a certainty even before Westerly's sleep weighted eyes beheld the tall and careless figure of the Three o'Clock Man standing by his bed. If the man had been repugnant to him before, he seemed hideous now. He seemed to convey some horrible threat by his presence. What was it?

Westerly gave it no words, but he felt the moment had come for liberation. He determined to make a stpreme effort to free himself. Failing, he was convinced that he would be forevermore in the presence of this fearful guest. So, with an effort that took the blood from his heart and brought the drops out upon his skin, Westerly raised himself, staring unflinchingly at the Three o'Clock Man, rose from his bed and slowly advanced. The advance is slow in the face of a cruel enemy, but it is sometimes certain. It was certain with Westerly. Inch by inch they went on, facing each other, the man backing, Westerly advancing, every muscle set, every nerve strained, brain and soul and mind fixed on victory. Across the room they went, hating each other more every passing second and showing their hate on their distorted faces, wrestling as men may not wrestle with their muscles till the creature went out of the side of the room-faded from Westerly's sight. He was gone. By some great, comfortable knowledge Westerly knew him gone forever. Hardly conscious, he sank upon his bed, panting like one who has been in a frantic race or fight.

"I must tell Elsa Sessions," he remembered thinking as he sank off into a blurred condition, half fainting, half sleeping. "But, after all," he reflected the next morning, "she will never believe me. Perhaps I would better keep the strange matter of the Three o'Clock Man quite to himself."

Which he did. So it must have been the Three o'Clock Man who told .- Chicago Tribune.

She Didn't Appear.

One day not many years ago there appeared on the bill of a certain place of amusement the fact that Mr. and Mrs. Salvini would present an interesting feature on the programme. Mrs. Salvini's part in the entertainment was the task of working the stereonticon from the gallery, while her hus-band performed on the stage. Mrs. Salvini's work was well done and was just as important as that of her husband. A reporter, who was to write an account of the programme, however, turned in something like this:

"Mr. and Mrs. Salvini were on the programme. Mr. Salvini was present and did execulent work, but for some unaccountable reason, which was not explained, Mrs. Salvini did not make her appearance."-Detroit Free Press.
