J. J. Worley, an employe of the paper mills, was struck by the engine of the south-bound Southern Pacific freight train Monday morning at the crossing near the Congregational church, and received some severe injuries. Worley had started to his work and was seen to hesitate before he started over the crossing. He was thrown several feet, and his right arm was broken, there was a severe scalp wound and the ribs in the vicinity of the back were pretty severely wrenched. Ormsby, superintendent of the Cascade forest reserve, have received their appointments, and they started out to begin their work Sunday. They will be located south of the Upper Clackamas hatchery, taking in the territory between the Clackamas and Mollala rivers. E. R. Greenman, superintendent of the Upper Clackamas hatchery, who was in town during the week, stated that he has everything in readiness to begin taking chinook salmon eggs by July 25. The hatching troughs are in place at the new substation, three miles below the main hatchery, and it is expected that a large haul of eggs will be made there. If a good catch is made, a building will be erected for permanent use. This is the policy adopted by the fish commissioner wherever it is intended to establish hatcheries in the state—first, to ascertain whether the catch will be sufficient to justify the erection of a hatchery.

A few days ago Sheriff Cooke made complaint to the board of county commissioners that County Assessor Eli Williams was not giving a complete description of lands in making up the assessment books, and the board referred the matter to Deputy District Attorney J. U. Campbell and Mayor C. D. Latourette for opinions in the premises. At an adjourned meeting of the board Wednesday both attorneys handed in opinions in the matter, substantially the same, to the effect that the assessor had a right to make up his assessment books by referring to the book letter and page number where the description of the lands were in deed or will records.

Theodore Griel, an employe of the woolen mills, who performs the duties of watchman on Sundays, was accidentally drowned last Sunday evening at the rear of the mill. He did not return for supper at the usual time, and his son went out to look for him. He found him near where his boat was fastened to the bank, standing in a stooping position against the bank, with about six inches of water over his head. He had evidently slipped while going down to his boat, struck a rock, which partially stunned him, and attempted to climb out, but was unable to get his head above water. Coroner Strickland held an inquest Monday morning, and the jury returned a verdict of accidental drowning. The funeral Tuesday was morning at the Catholic church, was largely attended. The services were under the auspices of St. John's Branch, No. 647, C. K. of A. The deceased was born in 1838 at Materholz, Bavaria, Germany. came down from Dawson, 4000 having made the trip on the ice before the thaw came. At least 25,000 people had gathered at St. Michael, 350 miles distant, and made their way to Cape Nome as soon as the boats began running. Lots for business or building purposes cost $2000, and are held by squatter's right, pending the arrival of the United States commissioners. Hundreds of people who have stocks of merchandise of various kinds are unable to secure business locations, and are anxiously waiting opportunities to set up. Circuit Court.

Judge McBride held an adjourned term of the circuit court last Thursday. In the matter of the State of Oregon vs. Randolph Stricklin, the pioneer, who died a few months ago, it was ordered that costs taxed against the defendant for $135.28, said judgment having been satisfied by a pardon from Governor Pennoyer, be satisfied of record. This was done so that the judgment would not stand against the estate of the deceased. In November, 1887, Stricklin was convicted of assault with a dangerous weapon on Mathias Kandle, of Highland, and was sentenced to serve for one year in the penitentiary. A motion was made for a new trial, and Stricklin was subsequently pardoned by Governor Pennoyer, thus avoiding a term in the penitentiary.

"The Smart Set," for July does not interest summer readers they may as well give over the task of finding anything that will. Its pages are full of the atmosphere of mountains and sea, and are written with all the art and fascination known to the cleverest of living writers. The novelette of the number, "When Reginald Was Caroline," by Edward S. Van Zile, is one of the few really humorous long stories ever written in this country. Mr. Van Zile's story is so full of startling situations, which are withal so comic, that it must prove vastly entertaining to the whole reading world. Julien Gordon (Mrs. Van Rensselaer Cruger) contributes to the number a remarkable social study entitled "The Voice Within;" Gertrude Atherton writes in her usual powerful style a thrilling story entitled "The Striding Place;" Stephen Fiske contributes his reminiscences of "The First Ocean Yacht Race," in which race he accompanied James Gordon Bennett on the Henrietta across the Atlantic; Clinton Ross and Will N. Harben have stories entitled respectively "The White Doe" and "Angels Unaware;" other stories are by Vance Thompson, Prince Vladimir Vaniatsky, Howard M. Hoke and W. J. Thorold, and there is a story in the original French by Leon de Tinsan. The poems are by Edgar Fawcett, Clinton Scollard, Arthur Stringer, Carolyn Wells, Frank Roe Batchelder, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, and many others.
