TRYING TO KEEP COOL. A Story of a Summer Family Picnic.

"This is insufferable," said Briggs to his wife, "absolutely insufferable. I don't see how you stand it or why you stand it. If I didn't have to be down town all day I'd have the children out in the park or in the country such a day as this. I certainly wouldn't stay in an oven of a house when there are trees and grass and breezes to be found if you only go in search of them."

There was no hour or more of good hard work as any one who ever has tried to start for a little outing knows, and some of the work fell to the lot of Briggs himself. He acted, under the orders of Mrs. Briggs, who became general superintendent temporarily, and as a result when they were ready to start he had to change his collar and his negligee shirt.

"How far have we got to walk now?" asked Mrs. Briggs. "Only four blocks," answered Briggs. "Then we may hope to be decently comfortable. Come along! We've no time to waste."

"This negligee shirt of mine," said Briggs, "looks as if I had worn it in swimming, but we'll have some comfort as soon as we get under way."

"If we don't start soon," returned Mrs. Briggs, "I shall faint. I simply cannot stand this stifling atmosphere."

parties scurrying away in the direction of the grove, "we'll have to run for it or all the best places will be taken."

"Well, you'll have to do the running," returned Mrs. Briggs with decision, "I don't intend to kill myself. I'll look after the children and you take the hammock and the lunch basket and go on ahead."

So Briggs ran a quarter of a mile, carrying weight for age, and succeeded in pre-empting a spot where two scrawny trees somewhat filtered the sun's rays, and even then he came near having to defend his location with physical force.

"Now, I'll go hunt up some of the boys I know," he said, when Mrs. Briggs and the children arrived. "You'll do nothing of the sort," replied Mrs. Briggs promptly. "You'll put up the hammock first."

"Now, this is what I call comfort," he said, as he slipped at the flies and the mosquitoes. "I'll rest here a little while and then I'll hunt up some of the boys I know. I didn't tell them I was coming, so they—"

Briggs drew an armchair up in front of an open window and dropped wearily into it when he reached home. "By George! but this is comfort!" he said. "There's a right cool breeze blowing through here."

Their First Lesson. A member of the late E. P. Roe tells an amusing story of the first lesson which he and his brother ever received in Roman history.

Among our most loved and honored guests, during our childhood, was Dr. Samuel Cox, for many years a prominent clergyman in New York. At times our conversation turned on history, and I remember, on one occasion, he asked Edward and me if we could give him the names of the first Roman triumvirate.

"Unhappily the good doctor could not remember the name of the third triumvir and the lack troubled him greatly. That night, about 2 o'clock, I was startled by a loud knock on my bedroom door, and Dr. Cox called out: "Mary, are you awake?"

In Italy the officers, at least, are immaculate and picturesque. The common soldiers are, perhaps, not so impressive. They are short, stocky little fellows, bow legged to a man, and in any clothes would not present a very martial appearance. But the officers are big, fine looking men, and their uniforms rival the women's hats in brilliancy. The colors used are very un-military, pale blue and silver, gray with green stripes, yellow and scarlet and gold.

Gingerbread. Gingerbread, as early as the fourteenth century, was made of rye meal, honey, ginger and spices. But the gingerbread of old New England that forms so prominent a part of the stable diet has undergone many an evolution since that time.
