FARM TALKS.

Some Experiences of Practical Clackamas County Farmers.

C. N. Wait, of Canby, has tried the plan of feeding prunes to hogs instead of drying them, and is well pleased with the results. Mr. Waite had a large prune crop, the product of nine acres of full-bearing trees. His time was pretty well occupied with the dairy business, and he had no time to dry. He read of chemical analysis, showing that a pound of dried prunes contained as much nutriment as a pound of beef-steak. So he is fattening his hogs on prunes and is satisfied with the results from a financial and labor-saving point of view. It has been demonstrated by other farmers that prunes are a nutritious and valuable article of hog food, putting solid pork on swine frames. The hogs will bring as good a price as 30s and 40s when converted into hog meat, but the size of the prune does make a difference in the market. Mr. Wait sends the cream from his herd of cows to Portland, it being handled through the skimming station at Canby. The skimmed milk is taken home, where it is used to feed young heifer calves. Mr. Wait sells all the male calves for veal and keeps the heifers to add to the herd of milk cows. He contemplates putting in a cream separator at his place, which will save handling a lot of bulky milk twice, and the skimmed milk will be sweet and in good condition for feed.

Seiver Ramsby, of Molalla, brought in a lot of dressed hogs this week, which he sold to local butchers for seven cents per pound. He does not let the pigs get over one year old before they are fattened and marketed. This season he fattened 80 head, letting them first take the pea field, and feeding some wheat. Mr. Ramsby says that he realized $1 per bushel out of the wheat that he fed the hogs.

J. R. Shaver, of Molalla, who sells hundreds of beef cattle to local butchers every year, has purchased a stock ranch in the Molalla mountains. This will afford excellent summer range for his cattle, and when the snow comes they can be fed on his home farm.

Barney Fullert has one of the best appointed barns in Clackamas county, and he contemplates still further improvements in the interior. Its immense dimensions have heretofore been given in these columns. A solid stack of 50 tons of clover hay, covers a large area of floor space, reaching almost to the high roof. The cow stables are models of convenience.

At the Partlow place at Mount Pleasant are three large wooden tanks and auxiliary apparatus that were constructed at considerable expense to be used in the manufacture of pure cider vinegar. W. B. Partlow and his son, James Partlow began manufacturing this vinegar on a small scale, supplying the local demand. Fairly good prices prevailed for it was the genuine article. More apparatus was added, for it was the ultimate intention of not only supplying the entire state of Oregon, but to ship a part of the product to Eastern markets. The vinegar had to stand three years to acquire that desirable natural, rich red color. About the time the time the works had reached a stage that bid fair to be the beginning of a profitable enterprise, acid vinegar made its appearance on the market, and it was impossible to compete with the chemical product. Had a pure food law been in effect, the industry would have probably flourished. James Partlow has recently burned off a big area of timber land, and sown the ground to timothy. Everything that will do for wood on the Partlow farm, poles being cut up with a saw run by a horse power attachment. Very few Clackamas county hogs have as yet been sold, the majority of the growers holding on for better prices. What few sales have been made were for 10 and 11 cents.

FALLS SAUNTERINGS.

Clackamas can boast of two successful country fairs at the same time. Last Friday and Saturday fairs were held at Marquam and Milwaukie and the attendance was good, notwithstanding the Portland carnival was a counter attraction. No other county in the state except Clackamas, could do this.

Several farmers have suggested during the past week, that it would be an act of humanity for the Humane Society to see that public watering troughs for horses are provided in Oregon City. A number of smaller towns in the county have public watering troughs.

One day last week the Oregon City edition of the Evening Telegram printed a list of teachers for several schools in Clackamas and Marion counties, stating that were appointed by Superintendent Zinser. Such lamenable ignorance is inexcusable, or the writer might have been drunk. And the Enterprise copied the item. Outside people reading this would take Oregon City people for a set of yahoos. There is not a 10-year old boy or girl living in the backwoods districts, but that knows teachers are elected by the district boards.

CHURCH GATHERINGS.

The Portland Presbytery Holds Fall Session Here.

The fall meeting of the Portland Presbytery on Tuesday and Wednesday was a notable event in the history of the Oregon City Presbyterian church. Rev. M. D. McClelland, of the Fourth Presbyterian church, Portland, was elected moderator. Many prominent ministers were in attendance, and the session was unusually interesting. The delegates were entertained by the members of the congregation, and dinner and supper was served by the ladies' aid society at the home Mrs. A. T. Muir.

The Ladies Altar Society of St. John's Catholic church met Monday night to make arrangements for a church fair to be held in some hall in Oregon City during the month of December. It is intended to raise $1000 to fix up the interior and exterior of the church. Rev. T. L. Elliott will hold Unitarian services at the Willamette hall Saturday night.
