When the dark cloud of death spread i's mantle of mourning over the home of James Miller on last Friday morning. it robbed that home of a husband and father whose every effort and desire in life was centered on the most commendable object any mind tould be directed towards, that of providing comforts and securing happiness for the little domestic circle, which formed the nucleus of his whole existence. Though severely ill for several years and his demise expected at almost any time, still when the blow come it was a shock that had no alleviating conditions, and though expressions of condolence were show-ered on the bereaved family by a host of sympathizing friends, they could not atone for the vacancy in the home and in the hearts of the widow and the fatheriess. As each soul is borrowed from eternity, the time must come when each will pay the debt, and in the dark hours of loneliness there is a gleam of comfort in the knowledge that the departed one has passed beyond the Frank Treadwell, Bennett, Is., was wait to join the great majority.
