Health

The story here this week is more of a success than it is of failures. Every week has its quota of cases, but the number of those who have recovered is far greater than those who have succumbed. The maladies which are no longer with us are too many to mention. It is only necessary to say that the general health of the community is improving, and we are all much indebted to those who have been doing their best to keep the patients in bed or to get them there.

The springs are beginning to open, and the expectorations of the city are again being poured forth into the streets. This is a time when care is required, and the physicians are again called upon to do their work. The public is warned to avoid all exposure, and to keep the windows closed when the rain is falling. The atmosphere is still damp, and the air is not fit for breathing.

The weather is pleasant, but the temperature is still low. The people are advised to keep warm, and to wear their overcoats. The children are warned to keep out of the cold, and to keep their heads covered. The hands are to be kept clean, and the feet are to be kept warm.

The hospitals are full, and the patients are crowded. The medical men are busy, and the nurses are overworked. The beds are to be kept clean, and the patients are to be kept comfortable. The physicians are to be called upon, and the patients are to be watched closely.

The public is urged to avoid all exposure, and to keep the windows closed when the rain is falling. The atmosphere is still damp, and the air is not fit for breathing. The people are advised to keep warm, and to wear their overcoats. The children are warned to keep out of the cold, and to keep their heads covered. The hands are to be kept clean, and the feet are to be kept warm.

The hospitals are full, and the patients are crowded. The medical men are busy, and the nurses are overworked. The beds are to be kept clean, and the patients are to be kept comfortable. The physicians are to be called upon, and the patients are to be watched closely.

The public is urged to avoid all exposure, and to keep the windows closed when the rain is falling. The atmosphere is still damp, and the air is not fit for breathing. The people are advised to keep warm, and to wear their overcoats. The children are warned to keep out of the cold, and to keep their heads covered. The hands are to be kept clean, and the feet are to be kept warm.

The hospitals are full, and the patients are crowded. The medical men are busy, and the nurses are overworked. The beds are to be kept clean, and the patients are to be kept comfortable. The physicians are to be called upon, and the patients are to be watched closely.

The public is urged to avoid all exposure, and to keep the windows closed when the rain is falling. The atmosphere is still damp, and the air is not fit for breathing. The people are advised to keep warm, and to wear their overcoats. The children are warned to keep out of the cold, and to keep their heads covered. The hands are to be kept clean, and the feet are to be kept warm.