Mr. Editor—Please allow space in your paper to explain Mr. Bagby's remarks and also tell the truth of the matter about the so-called "Mistake" which is called in this locality. One time in the month of March Mrs. Milstead was visiting friends at the off house in Oregon City and it was there she became exposed to the mumps. On her return home a few days after, she was stricken down with that disease. Her neighbors, of course, called to wait upon her during her illness, and of course she gave them no warning, and now there are 22 cases of small pox at this section at the present time. Mr. Bagby needs his article, "In justice to Mrs. Milstead," if there is any justice for her it should be severe. After her recovery she sent her little boy to school. In a short time he took ill, at school, thereby exposing all the children present. Mr. Bagby said that she did not know she was exposed. This is false, or else the story is stretched all to broke, for Mrs. Milstead told her nearest neighbor that she was exposed, but did not want her neighbors and friends to know it. After she was cured, trouble, sickness and loss of money and time in eight different families, I would like Mr. Bagby to show me where he could meet out justice for such a person except as above mentioned. Mr. Bagby did not settle it as he thought by writing that smooth article in the paper, not by a whole lot.

WOMAN AND FASHION

Smart Blouses.

The exit of the blouse has been so frequently predicted that it is always a surprise, although a pleasant one, at the beginning of a season to see dainty blouses displayed, with new embellishments, which are practical and convenient. They are particularly smart this season, enlivened with embroidery, incrustations, stitched plaids—in fact,

A LOUISIANE BLOUSE.

all manner of complicated yet delicate ornaments. The blouse has made its way with marked precision and determination, so that now it has obtained its entree to the theater matinee and receptions. The blouse here illustrated is of lilac gray silk, with stitched seams and crossed fastenings. The trimming consists of dark silk cord in the same color, with inwoven steel, over lilac gray chine silk; collar of yellowish Arabian lace.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Tucked Bodice.

Only such remnants of last winter's black waist were retained as were necessary to supply the requisite strapings for a smart tucked blue crpe bodice that looks up in the rear. With a knot of blue velvet heather blossoms pinned on the left breast, this captivating gown has easily passed under the most critical eyes as an entirely new creation from Paris, says the Chicago Record-Herald.

What's become of all the gold that used to glitter last winter from the tips of her braided slippers to the bow in the hair of the well dressed woman? You can walk the shops and investigate the dressmakers' establishments and not find enough gold braid to loop once round your little finger. Gold speckled velveteens and gold threaded gauzes have disappeared, too, and the only possible successor shown to the days of gilt and glitter we knew twelve months ago is a taffeta decorated with dots, dashes and weed designs done with a brush dipped in copper paint.

White Kid as Trimming. White kid as a dress trimming has been very smart this spring. A very pretty suit, here illustrated, is trimmed in this fashion. The material is navy blue canvas. The skirt is quite plain.

A PRETTY SUIT.

with a jaunty trimming of the white kid over the hips in yoke effect. Black and gold cord outlines the kid trimming on the skirt as well as the jacket. This is open in front and cleverly cut in curves all edged with the kid and outlined with the cord. Gold buttons also trim the front of the jacket. The hat is blue straw, simply trimmed with a scarf of blue silk, dotted with white. A clever arrangement of a silk scarf similar to that used on the hat may be noted in the jacket, where the scarf gives a vest effect.—New York Mail and Express.

An Odd Parasol.

An odd parasol is of white satin, perfectly plain, except for a garland of violets which encircles the edge.
