A Little Boy's Life Saved.

I have a few words to say regarding Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It saved my boy's life and feel that I cannot praise it enough. I bought a bottle of it from A. E. Steere, of Goodwin, S. D., and when I got home with it the poor baby could hardly breathe. I gave the medicine as directed every ten minutes until he "threw up" and then I thought sure he was going to choke to death. We had to pull the phlegm out of his mouth in great long strings. I am positive that if I had not got that bottle of cough medicine, my boy would not be on earth today.—Joel Demont, Inwood, Iowa. "Some time ago my daughter caught a severe cold. She complained of pains in her chest and had a bad cough. I gave her Chamberlain's Cough Remedy according to directions and in two days was well and able to go to school. I have used this remedy in my family for the past seven years and have never known it to fail," says James Prendergast, merchant, Annato Bay, Jamaica, West India Islands. The pains in the chest indicated an approaching attack of pneumonia, which was undoubtedly warded off by Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It counteracts any tendency of a cold toward pneumonia. Sold by G. A. Harding.

HOUSEWORK

Too much housework wrecks women's nerves. And the constant care of children, day and night, is often too trying for even a strong woman. A haggard face tells the story of the overworked housewife and mother. Damaged menses, leucorrhoea and falling of the womb result from overwork. Every housewife needs a remedy to regulate her menses and to keep her sensitive female organs in perfect condition.

WINE OF CARDUI

is doing this for thousands of American women to-day. It cured Mrs. Jones and that is why she writes this frank letter:

Glendean, Ky., Feb. 10, 1901. I am so glad that your Wine of Cardui is helping me. I am feeling better than I have felt for years. I am doing my own work without any help, and I washed last week and was not one bit tired. That shows that the Wine is doing me good. I am getting fresher than I ever was before, and sleep good and eat hearty. Before I began taking Wine of Cardui, I used to have to lay down five or six times every day, but now I don't think of lying down through the day.

CHAMP CLARK STORIES

Good Things Gathered by an Observing Statesman.

Chautauqua Assemblies a Great Educational Force—Professional and Amateur Lecturers—How a Kentuckian Beat a Circus Man—Turtle Too Much For a Lion—Paddy and the Judge—Colonel Bain as an Orator—The Farmer Boy on Dudes.

[Copyright, 1902, by Champ Clark.] Comparatively few persons have any adequate conception of what a great educational force—intellectual, moral, religious and material—the Chautauqua assemblies have come to be. There are nearly 400 of them. A Chautauqua assembly is a sort of literary, scientific, oratorical and musical camp meeting, a college or university in a tent or tabernacle. They are carrying the best thought of this generation to the remotest nooks and corners of the republic. All sorts of public speakers appear on their platforms—grave ecclesiastics, profound university dons, solemn statesmen, famous soldiers, distinguished editors, celebrated authors, poets and travelers and specialists in every branch of learning.

Most assuredly the Chautauquas give a variety of mental pabulum. Sometimes a red-hot debate is added as a novel feature and a drawing card. Lecturers fall into two natural divisions—professionals and amateurs. With the former it is their sole vocation. General Gordon, Colonel George W. Bain, Governor Bob Taylor, George R. Wendling and a few others do nothing else from year's end to year's end. The amateurs lecture sporadically, as the doctors would say, each having some other regular profession or calling. "Marse" Henry Watterson edits a great newspaper, the Rev. Sam Jones and Dr. MacArthur preach, and so on to the end of the chapter. Some men stay on the platform a lifetime, making towering reputations and piles of money. For instance, Wendell Phillips and Colonel Bob Ingersoll were rated among America's great orators. It is said that Phillips raked in $150,000 on his lecture on "The Lost Arts." Others lecture a short time while in the public eye. For instance, while Henry M. Stanley wore a sort of halo by reason of his African explorations he received as high as $1,000 per night—rather comfortable wages. For the last six years William J. Bryan has perhaps made more money than any other lecturer. He had a very amusing and profitable experience in 1897. The Chautauqua assembly at Carthage, Mo., wanted him for one lecture. Like Bar-kiss, he was "willin'," but demanded $300 for his services. The Chautauqua, thinking that too much, declined, but offered him half the gate receipts. He accepted their proposition and had for his share something over $2,500, a pretty fair day's work.

Oratory Not a Lost Art. The question is frequently asked, "Is oratory a lost art?" Pessimists who see nothing good in the present and only eternal night in the future and who are forever looking back to a golden age assert that it is; that all the orators are dead; that only jawsmiths now vex the ears of men and saw the circumambient atmosphere with their arms. I take the negative. I'll make my affidavit that there is at least one orator still moving the mind and heart by the power of spoken words. His name is George W. Bain, and his habitat is the ancient home of orators, Lexington, Ky.

I had the exquisite pleasure of hearing him deliver a temperance lecture in 1901 at the Fort Smith Chautauqua. In Arkansas. The audience was splendid, the theme hackneyed. For over an hour he swayed his hearers as the storm king sways the forest. At one moment he excited them to such uproarious laughter that it must have startled the turtles sleeping on the banks of the Arkansas. The next they were dissolved in tears. I am not ashamed to confess that he set my lacrimal glands to working freely and copiously, and I have heard all our great orators from John C. Breckinridge to Joseph W. Bailey. The way that Colonel Bain played upon that weird harp of a thousand strings, the human heart, was a revelation to me.

Concerning the Warmburger. In a lecture on "Boys and Girls, Nice and Naughty; or, The Pendulum of Human Life," at the Springdale Chautauqua, in Arkansas, in 1901 he edged in a section on temperance and told this amazing story: "Girls, I have a new word for you—warmburger. It hasn't appeared in any dictionary yet, but it may. It came about in this way: At the first circus that ever appeared in Allen county, Ky., an African lion was advertised as one of the attractions. It was stated in the bills that it was the first ever brought to America. When the show opened, among other things the ringmaster said: 'Ladies and gentlemen, in this cage is a magnificent African lion. Behold him in all his majesty and ferocious glory. He is the king of beasts and can easily whip any of the animal kingdom.' When he got that far in his oration," said Colonel Bain, "a great, tall, muscular Kentuckian arose and roared, 'Hey, mister, do you say that that lion can whip any sort of animal?' 'Yes,' replied the lion keeper with great composure. 'Well,' drawled the Kentuckian, 'I'll bet you $5 that I have an animal that can lick him.' 'I won't let the lion fight for $5. Make it $25 and I'll go you, provided you tell me what sort of animal it is.' 'All right,' replied the Kentuckian as he put up the money, 'it's a warm-burger!' So the match was made. The Kentuckian left the tent, but soon returned with a sack upon his shoulder, concealed in which was his 'warmburger.' He opened the sack and out of it emptied into the lion's cage a huge snapping turtle. The lion walked up to it, stuck his nose down and deliberately proceeded to smell the 'warmburger,' alias the turtle. The latter grabbed the king of beasts by the nose and held on like grim death. The lion tried to tear it off with his claws, but could not and finally began whining piteously. 'Take it off!' yelled the lion's keeper. 'The money is yours!' 'You take him off!' nouchalantly replied the triumphant Kentuckian. You smell a 'warmburger' to test his genuineness. Try the same method on any young man you suspect of drinking."

A Ducky In Court. Sitting under the shade of the trees between two sessions of the Chautauqua, some one read from a paper how Mrs. Kennedy, on trial for murder at Kansas City, threw herself upon the mercy of the court. Colonel Bain said: "That reminds me of an old colored brother down in Kentucky who was harassed up before a justice of the peace for some misdemeanor. The justice, who knew him well, said, 'Pompey, have you any lawyer?' 'No, sah,' replied Pompey, 'I'll jist throw myself on de ignance ob dis heah cote.'"

Pat and the Judge. In his lecture he said: "An Irishman rushed into the office of a justice of the peace and exclaimed in great excitement: 'Yer honor, there's a man out there says he's going to kill me! He showed me the pistol with which he intends to do it! Please have him arrested!' 'No use to do that, Pat. If he kills you, we will have him hanged.' 'Oh, judge,' responded Pat, 'and if it pl'ases yer honor, couldn't you have him hanged before he kills me, so I can attend the hanging?'"

How an Orator Was Made. "Poeta nascitur, non fit" ("The poet is born, not made"), is the old saying. The same remark is largely true of orators, but a man may possess the oratorical gift and not know it. For many years that was the case with Colonel Bain. The chances are that, if the meeting had never been held in Boston to denounce the slayers of Lovejoy, Wendell Phillips might never have discovered his great power as an orator. Likewise if a great temperance wave had not swept over the blue grass region of Kentucky about a quarter of a century ago Colonel Bain might and probably would have gone on to his dying day unconscious of the fact that he belongs to the tribe of silver-tongued orators.

Colonel William C. P. Breckinridge, himself a renowned practitioner of the art of Demosthenes and Cicero, once told me in the house of representatives at Washington how Bain got to lecturing. "George W. Bain was a brave young Confederate soldier," said the colonel. "When the war closed, he settled at Lexington and was engaged in the mercantile business. A temperance agitation was started. One night Bain was called on for some remarks and did so well that he surprised himself and all who heard him. The papers complimented him. He began to receive invitations to speak at schoolhouses in Fayette county. His speeches constantly and rapidly grew better. At first he received no compensation—not even expenses. Then he received expense money; then $5 and expenses. The temperance agitation spread, Bain's fame grew, and his compensation increased until he is one of the best paid and most famous platform orators in America."

An Honest Man. Is moral character a factor in eloquence? Is honesty a valuable asset for an orator? Let Colonel Bain's history answer. He was a merchant, a partner in a mercantile house. It failed for thousands of dollars, through no fault of his. He did not sit down and repine. He did not dodge. He took the platform and for 18 long, wearisome years he went up and down the land delighting multitudes with his wit, humor, pathos, eloquence and homely philosophy, earning the wherewithal to pay those old partnership debts. When that was done, he called the ex-creditors together and gave them a banquet. Only think of that unequalled performance! "All's well that ends well."

A Terse Epigram. In a lecture at the Springdale Chautauqua Dr. Lowe of Chicago university delivered himself of this epigram, which the audience received with uproarious delight: "A billion dollar steel trust or any other trust that may be trusted to steal."

The finest epigram uttered in America recently was by Walter Williams, editor of the Columbia (Mo.) Herald. In addressing his Sunday school class, the largest in the state, he said, "Fame has taken men from the forge, the plow and the carpenter's bench, but she was never known to reach over a picket fence and snatch a dude out of a hammock!" That's worthy of Pope, Rochefoucauld or Thomas Brackett Reed.

It takes me back to Colonel Bain again. In his lecture on boys and girls he tackled the dude and spoke of him as "lifting his hat to show his Henry Clay head—minus the Henry!" He continued: "An old farmer from the Genesee valley concluded to give his rustic 18-year-old son a chance to see the world by taking him on a trip to New York city. They stopped on an eligible corner to watch the flood of humanity sweep by. A great many dudes went up and down. The youth had never seen any of that species of animal before and gazed at them in open mouthed and silent wonder. His father, noting his abstracted air, said, 'My son, what are you thinking about?' The lad replied, 'I was just studying about what goll darned varmint you see when you go out without a gun!'"

Half and Half.

The dyspeptic may well be represented pictorially as being half masculine and half feminine, and combining the least-desirable characteristics of either sex. He has all the stubbornness of the man with the peevish irritability of a sick woman. He's not pleasant company at home or abroad.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures dyspepsia and other diseases of the stomach and associated organs of digestion and nutrition. It renews physical health which carries with it cheerfulness of temper, and makes life a pleasure instead of a penance.

The "Discovery" purifies the blood by eliminating the corrupt and poisonous accumulations from which disease is bred. It increases the activity of the blood-making glands, so increasing the supply of pure rich blood, which gives life to every organ of the body. It gives new life and new strength.

"Your 'Golden Medical Discovery' has performed a wonderful cure," writes Mr. M. H. House, of Charleston, Franklin Co., Ark. "I had the worst case of dyspepsia, the doctors say that they ever saw. After trying seven doctors and everything I could hear of, with no benefit, I tried Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and now I am cured."

Accept no substitute for "Golden Medical Discovery." There is nothing "just as good" for diseases of the stomach, blood and lungs.
