Of Courier Boys Who Know a Good Thing When They See it.

ONLY FORTY DAYS MORE AND THE COURIER PUMPKIN WILL BE CUT.

The Number of Seed Will be Ascertained and the Piano, Awarded

During the past week the Courier office has been a hive of industry. Dozens of our old subscribers have been in to see us and nearly all of them have renewed their subscriptions to the Courier.

The pumpkin weighs 96 pounds, and the nearest guess as to the number of seed it contains, gets the $400.00 piano.

son making the nearest correct estimate upon the number of seed in the big fellow. Have you paid your subscription as yet. If not why not. Do not put it off but come in at once.

We have out two solicitors who are working up our list. Mr. W. R. Garrett is working in the country and Mr. William Menhall is hustling in the town and the villages.

We don't want any good man to escape. We are going to have 2,000 subscribers by the first day of January next. We want you to be one of them.

The following is a list of those who have paid their subscription during the past week and made a guess on the number of seed in the big pumpkin:

We promise in advance that the Courier will be a better paper next year than it has ever been before. We want to put it in every home in the county, we want to make it useful. Next year we will have two elections in Clackamas county, one for county officials and one for President. You will want to know what is going on and if you are a subscriber to the Courier you will know beyond peradventure.

Sacajawea, The Bird Woman.

The following cut from the columns of the Louisville Courier Journal and written by that splendid scholar and superb soldier J. Stoddard Johnson is worthy of reproduction in every newspaper of the great Northwest.

an Englishman, leaving one son, whose descendants are proud to trace back to her as their ancestress. Her story has been the theme of romance and poetry; artists have taken delight in perpetuating her figure in painting and sculpture, and her act of mercy and good will frescoed on the walls of the rotunda of the Capitol at Washington. All that gratitude and admiration for her heroism could do for the preservation of her memory has been freely done. and the save, elements of the Indian character have been veiled with a halo of romance by her heroic action.

But Pocahontas is not the only Indian woman who merits recognition. Those who have read the thrilling story of Lewis and Clark's expedition to the Pacific in 1804-06 cannot but have been struck by the wonderful service rendered by the party of exploration by the young Indian wife of Chabonneau, the half-breed interpreter. It was not as that of Pocahontas, a single act unattended with personal danger and hardships and heightened in interest by the beauty of the heroine, but the exhibition of fortitude and fidelity extending for more than a year, under circumstances unparalleled in history.

In the spring of 1804 Lewis and Clark started up the Missouri river with a small body of men in light boats propelled by oars and sails and proceeded as far as the Mandan Nation, about 1500 miles, where they went into winter quarters on friendly terms with the Indians. Here they met several Indian traders from the Hudson Bay Company in the far North and hardy adventurers, among whom was Toussaint Chabonneau, a French half-breed, who had been higher up the river and whom they engaged as an interpreter. His wife, Sacajawea, belonged to an Indian tribe of Shoones, or Snake Indians, who lived on the western slope of the Rocky Mountains.

After four months of hard labor up stream for 1800 miles, the expedition reached the headwaters of the Missouri and the leaders were filled with apprehension at the difficulties which lay between them and the Pacific. It was then that the Bird Woman proved her protector and deliverer. She recognized with girlish glee scenes familiar in her childhood and the spot where she had been captured by their Minnetarees. Soon Indians made their appearance, creating alarm, but Sacajawea fearlessly went forward to meet them and found they were her own tribe and that its chief was her brother. There ensued the most friendly relations between the members of the expedition and the Indians, who furnished them horses and enabled them to make their way over the mountains and at the mouth of the Lewis river, whence, before winter, after many thrilling adventures, they descended the Columbia in canoes and safely reached the Pacific. The Indians everywhere, through the influence of the Bird Woman, who proved a mascot to the expedition, received them with every demonstration of friendship.

The brief outline here given of the valuable services rendered by this Indian heroine is to be found detailed, from day to day along with the other incidents of this wonderful expedition, in the narrative published first in 1814. But of late it has been brought out in more romantic relief in Mrs. Eva Emery Dye's admirable volume, "The Conquest," in which both the history and romance of the expedition are faithfully epitomized.

After spending the winter of 1805-06 on the Pacific coast near the mouth of the Columbia, Lewis and Clark began their long homeward journey over the same route by which they had gone, and as before, the Bird Woman was the same good angel. At one critical juncture, when struggling through heavy snows in the mountains of the western slope of the Rockies, they lost their way and death stared them in the face, and they were only saved by the intelligence of Sacajawea, who piloted them safely into the lost trail through her instinctive knowledge of woodcraft. After many critical adventures, in which she rendered similar service, the party of thirty-three arrived safely in St. Louis after a six months' journey without the loss of a man on the entire trip, except in the death of Charles Floyd from sickness within six months of their initial start up the Missouri. Except a brief notice of a traveler who saw her in 1811, nothing is known of what became of the Bird Woman and her boy. But now that a centennial celebration of the Lewis and Clark exploration is to be held in Portland, Or., in 1905, steps have been taken to perpetuate the memory of this long neglected heroine. An association has been formed for the purpose of erecting a statue of Sacajawea, the Bird Woman, to be placed in one of the parks of Portland, and its success is assured. It will be of bronze, of heroic size and its cost will be $7000.
