SMITH WANTS SOME MONEY

Bring Suit Against Editor of Canby Tribune For $250.

George W. Dixon, a newspaper man of the town of Canby, 12 miles south of this city, is the defendant in a suit that has been instituted in the Circuit Court by William M. Smith, to recover $250, which the plaintiff alleges Dixon refused to turn over to him.

The complaint of Smith, which was filed by Attorney O. D. Eby, states that he formed a co-partnership with Dixon, April 1, 1906, and they proceeded to effect sales of real estate on commission. It is evident that the date of All Fools' Day was a hoodoo with Smith, although the firm did considerable business of a minor quality, until September 15, when they negotiated and made the sale of a tract of saw timber belonging to James Skirving. For this service they received the sum of $500, but Dixon happened to be "Johnny-on-the spot" and got the money. Instead of turning over half of the amount to his partner, he pocketed the entire amount, and this course of action resulted in a speedy difference that time has not healed. Mr. Smith now asks the court for an accounting, and wants the partnership dissolved.

The plaintiff is a well known farmer of Canby, where he has lived for many years. Dixon is editor and publisher of the Canby Tribune, which he started less than one year ago.
