

KICK AGAINST FORESTRY LAW

Only One Warden Appointed For Clarkamas County.

NO FUNDS ARE AVAILABLE

County Judge Grant B. Dimick Denounces New System As Dangerous--People Dissatisfied.

Farmers of Clarkamas County are having great difficulty in procuring authority to burn their slashings and the passage of the new forestry law by the state legislature has caused a great deal of trouble. The farmers during the last two years became accustomed to the law that was in force, but there were many complaints lodged against it, and the forestry law was substituted. County Judge Grant B. Dimick denounces the new law as dangerous, and says it only puts a premium on dishonesty, as many people will set fire to their slashings at night, when none can see them, then insist that the brush caught fire accidentally. By request of the farmers he communicated with the State Board of Forestry, and the secretary Edmund P. Sheldon, advises him in the following words:

"Permits to burn are issued by fire wardens appointed by the Board, of which I am secretary. Clarkamas County has but few wardens, in fact, I believe only one, and we will be glad to appoint wardens upon the request of property owners or the County Court. Of course, you understand that the state has no funds to pay these wardens and they must look for their compensation to such property owners or parties interested in keeping down the fires, or some one might be appointed who would be willing to serve without pay and exercise due care in issuing said permits."

The secretary points out that there are instances, where no permit is necessary, and Section 5 of the law, says:

"During the period between June 1 and October 1, which is hereby designated the close season, it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to set fire or cause to be set fire, any slashing, or chopping, wood land or brush land, either his or their own or the property of another, without written or printed permission from a state fire warden and compliance with the terms thereof. This restriction shall not apply to the burning of log piles, stumps or brush heaps, in small quantities at a safe distance from other inflammable material and under adequate precautions and under personal control, and in accordance with regulations adopted by said Board; but if any such burning without permission shall result in the escape of fire and injury to the property of another, this shall be held prima facie evidence that such burning was not safe and was a violation of this section. Violation of these provisions shall be punished by a fine of not less than $25, nor more than $500, or by imprisonment of not less than 10 days nor more than three months."

RATHBONE SISTERS PICNIC.

Women Play Baseball at Willamette Last Sunday.

The picnic given last Sunday at Orpha Lodge, of Portland, and the Rathbone Sisters, of this city, was much enjoyed by those who attended. There were about 35 members of the Portland lodge and their husbands and about 20 of the local lodge, and their husbands, who took the 10:30 car for Willamette, where the day was spent by the spring. At noon a basket dinner was served, after which music and games and conversation were the features of the day. During the afternoon one of the principal features was a ball game given by the women, and their work was admired by the men. Five innings were played, the score standing 5 to 4. Mrs. Gevurtz, of Portland, was the umpire, and the coaches were many. Supper was also served before the picnicers returned on the 8 o'clock car for their homes.

Women Who Do

A Bright Literary Star of the Pacific Coast Is Mrs. Alice Prescott Smith, Who Lives in San Francisco.

It has been predicted that twenty-five years hence the Pacific coast of the United States will be in all respects of more importance than the Atlantic. Well, it looks that way. Even along the line of literature the number of gifted writers who hail from California is remarkable. Mrs. Alice Prescott Smith is one of these. Her latest novel, "Montlivet," proves her to possess fascinating power as a delineator of historic fiction. "Montlivet" goes away back, 200 years ago, when it seemed an almost even toss whether French, Indians or English should permanently possess this continent. She handles her theme so skillfully and keeps so much of an atmosphere of mystery pervading the tale that she has been compared to the great Cooper of "Leatherstocking" fame. Another of her striking novels is "The Legatee."

Literary Women's Earnings.

With the fortune whose foundation was laid by "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" Alice Hegan-Rice established a bank in Louisville. Kate Douglas Wiggin and Harriet Prescott Spofford used some of the money their wealthy parents drew to them to build lovely country homes in Maine. Although Edith Wharton was well to do before she took up novel writing, yet many of the dollars that came to her from her weird "House of Mirth" and other stories have gone to the beautifying of her summer home on Laurel lake, Lenox, Mass. It is notable because of its artistic furnishings. In England Marie Corelli has put some of her earnings into a luxurious country home hidden away in the woods, while Mrs. Humphry Ward's place in Hertfordshire is really like an old baronial estate in its proportions.

Two Ohio Fisher Girls.

Proving once more that a woman of grit and perseverance can do almost anything she undertakes, two girls of Connecticut, O., have for some years earned a living as lake fishermen. Their homes are on the border of Lake Erie, and their names are Kate Matthews and Bertha Miggs. Miss Matthews is large and of splendid physical strength and courage. Both have no end of courage, for that matter, but Miss Miggs is a slender girl, not so strong as her business partner, Miss Matthews. Both the girls' fathers were lake men. Miss Miggs' father was killed in a collision on Lake Erie. It was after his death that the two girls made their venture as professional fishermen. They got a small sloop, took with them John Huelman, an old man and uncle of Miss Matthews, and boldly sailed out to make a living for themselves and their families catching fish. Their commercial headquarters are at Huron. Both girls were fairly good navigators to begin, and soon they learned the management of boat and nets so well that they were quite safe to go out alone, leaving the uncle ashore to mend nets and transact business. They named their sloop the Hope.

They have done so well as fishermen that they now own the Hope and each has her home paid for, something which seems to have been out of the power of either girl's father to achieve. They also have each considerable money in bank. Thrilling escapes they have sometimes had. Once in a high wind a boom knocked Miss Miggs overboard. Though both girls are strong swimmers, the water was so rough that Miss Miggs would have drowned if Miss Matthews had not gone overboard after her. Then both came near being drowned, but managed to make the boat again. And once they were fired on by a Canadian revenue cutter when they were fishing.

A High Salaried Woman Cook.

Really, ladies, there is no occupation that pays better than cooking. To see a picture of Mrs. Rosa Lewis, chef of the Cavendish hotel, London, one would think her a handsome young society woman. She is refined and ladylike looking, and, as a matter of fact, she is both refined and ladylike. She earns $15,000 a year as head cook, and so famous is her reputation that she is sent for all over England to prepare dinners for great occasions.

Rich Redskins

Osage Indians Are the Wealthiest People Per Capita in the World. Squaws Who Are Heiresses. Running Deer and His Russian Bride.

THERE has long been an idea in the land that the only good Indian is a dead Indian, but when a man has a million dollars or two in his possession he is apt to be considered of some account whether his skin is white, red, yellow, brown or black. The red men of America have lost most of the land over which they once roamed and which as tribes they claimed to own. Generally speaking they never owned these lands as individuals, and the white men have gradually dispossessed them on the ground that such title as the red men could assert could not be maintained in the face of the need of the civilized world for their territory. Sometimes the lands of the Indian have been taken after duly ratified treaties of sale and sometimes they have been taken with little or no ceremony, but seldom has a tribe of aborigines received for its lands anything like their value according to the white man's real estate market. Nevertheless some of the western Indians are among the richest people in America. They own large funds held in trust for them by the government, accruing from sale of lands, and the lands which they have retained have vastly increased in value on account of the proximity of the cities and towns of the paleface or on account of their wealth in products which are comparatively useless to the red man in his native state, but are greatly desired by white people. For instance, the discovery of oil and natural gas on lands belonging to the Osage Indians has made them a very wealthy people, some say the richest per capita in the whole world. Chief Fish-me-ta-ha of the Osages is called the richest Indian in America, and his wealth is estimated at $2,000,000, while that of his entire family is put at $10,000,000. Since the wealth of some of the Redskins of today has been noised abroad the phrase "fortune hunting in the west" has taken on a new meaning. It may now signify marrying a rich squaw. An instance of this is the case of Tobias Nicholas, who disappeared from Philadelphia at the close of the civil war, but returned recently, much to the surprise of his relatives, who thought him dead. He married the daughter of a rich Oklahoma Indian and thus got a start in the railroad construction business.

Sometimes the case as to sex is reversed and a white woman marries an Indian brave who has money and lands. Several years ago Nellie Lutski, an American girl of Russian extraction, became the bride of Running Deer, one of the richest and most aristocratic of all the Osages in Oklahoma. Nellie's father was a tenant of Running Deer, and the latter loaned Lutski money so that he might send his wife and daughter on a visit to Russia. In gratitude for this favor Miss Nellie on her return aided Running Deer in his campaign for membership in the tribal council. Then the two fell in love, and there was a great wedding. Often an Osage belle brings her husband a dowry of from $15,000 to $25,000, and naturally girls of this kind are popular even among white young men who live in their vicinity. But the old Osage warriors and the wise women of the tribe are averse to the white men who come wooing the daughters of the nation, preferring to have them marry young men of their own race and thus preserve its identity. Every member of the tribe, buck or squaw or poptose, is supposed to be worth as much as $10,000, and among the Osages are Indians with fine estates, comfortable and even elegant homes, giving evidence of education and taste, while, on the other hand, some who are really rich still live in tepees, perhaps allowing their hired men to occupy the modern homes they have erected.

A. Thomas, the Beaver Creek wool and grain buyer, sold last week to San Francisco parties 6,480 pounds of wool, one of the largest wool shipments of recent years in this vicinity. Mr. Thomas bought most of the wool around Shubel and Carus paying the farmers 20 cents a pound.

Prescription Filling

Is next in importance to prescription writing. Many people will wait for hours for their doctor, as they should, but once they have the scrap of paper in their hand which may spell life or death, they fail to realize the importance of the next step. For nearly twenty years we have been filling prescriptions here carefully and conscientiously for doctors from all over this state, and in fact from almost every state in the union. No doctor here or elsewhere can truthfully say to his patient that he can get better service or better drugs than we supply if he were to take his prescription out of the state to be filled. Every honest doctor will admit that we are as fully and completely equipped for prescription work as the stores in the largest cities. Remember this: No matter what doctor writes the prescription, or what name may be on the blank, it is your prescription to be taken where you choose, and if you bring it to us you may rest assured that it will be filled correctly and at a price as low, and in many cases lower than you could get it elsewhere.
