TO CATCH CRIMINALS

Startling Theories Advanced by Professor Muensterberg.
HOW ELECTRICITY IS USED.

Harvard Psychologist Would Measure by Galvanometer Amount of Mental Excitement Prisoner on Trial Displayed—Claims List of Hundred Words; Also Sure Detective Method.

Professor Hugo Muensterberg of Harvard university advanced two new and startling theories for the detection of criminals by psychological methods in an address on "Psychology and Crime" at the City Club in Chicago the other afternoon.

The first was to measure the resistance of the body to an electric current to determine the subtlest variations of mental excitement. This might be used to tell if a man is lying. The second might be described as "catching a criminal with a list of 100 words."

"The mere fact that a suspect shows excitement when he is being questioned may mean nothing, especially as long as we cannot tell whether the excitement is due to the crime or the strain of the criminal procedure," said Professor Muensterberg. "But if he becomes excited suddenly, when the name of a hidden accomplice or the location of the crime is mentioned, this ought to have considerable value. To determine the existence of such mental excitement we have in the past depended on instruments to measure the acceleration of the pulse or quicker breathing or muscular twitching. But these are comparatively crude, and with a new method we can determine the most subtle mental excitement, so slight that none of these instruments would note it. This is by means of a galvanometer, which measures the body's resistance to an electric current passing through it. I have determined that the sweat glands in the skin are under the influence of the emotions, and so by placing the electrodes in the hands of the person to be examined the resistance of the skin to the current will betray even the slightest emotional changes."

"The courts so far have had little to do with psychologists, and the furthest psychology has been applied in any of them is to refuse to trust the optical impressions of a witness who is totally blind or the acoustic reports of an absolutely deaf man. The subject of variations of memory has had no place in criminal procedure. Even an oath means nothing in this way, for I have found by experiments that the subjective feeling of intensified memory which it seems to encourage in no way makes a witness safe from the tricks of the memory. Hypnotism has figured in the courts, but the popular impression has, as usual, been wrong. No man can be hypnotized into committing a crime.

"An interesting way of detecting crime might be known as the 'association of ideas method.' Every time a word is spoken the hearer at once associates some other idea with it. I say 'door'; you think of 'house' or 'room' or whatever other notion fits first into your head.

"To show you how this will work in the detection of crime, let me tell you of an experience I had. A suspect had been brought to me for a psychological test. He was perfectly frank and said he did not even know why he should be suspected of anything wrong. I requested him a list of 100 common words and asked him to name I have first thing that occurred to his mind in connection with each word. Then I noted the length of time it took him to answer by means of a stop watch. Out of the 100 words he replied to ninety-three with normal swiftness, between three-fifths and one and one-quarter seconds.

"But there were six words at which his mind halted for more than two and a half seconds. He did not know that he took longer to answer to these words, nor did he know that I noticed it. But the words were 'money,' 'bank,' 'check,' 'forger,' 'prison,' 'theft.' Future criminal proceedings were the result of this test.

"I have found that any man who has committed a crime always keeps in the background of his mind the memory of that crime as an idea he wants to suppress. When anything is suggested which in any way is connected with the idea he is trying to suppress, his mind becomes confused and slow, and it may become unduly excited, and he may blurt out a word suggested only because of the crime.

"Such a test is one against which no shrewdness of the witness and no skill of his lawyer can protect a suspect. The more he tries to guard himself the more certain he is to betray himself.

"But psychology has no standing in the courts at present, and with some of the experiences which the public has had with experts in recent years I do not think it is looking for more of them. The only way that any psychologist ever wants to be an expert in court is to be entirely under the jurisdiction of the court and not employed by either side. We are not handwriting experts."

Flowers Made of Butter.
A basket of roses made completely of butter, basket and all, has recently been exhibited through England by the government of Victoria, one of the states of Australia, to remind the mother country of the great agricultural wealth that abounds there. Over 15,000,000 worth of butter is now sent annually from Victoria to England.
