Former Oregon City Boy.

Gordon B. Moores, captain of the university of Oregon football team last season, and All-Northwest end, has taken issue with Dr. David Starr Jordan's article in the Pacific monthly on football, in which the Stanford president urges the substitution of the Rugby, or English system, for the American style of game. Moores is one of the best known football men on the coast.

Moores starts after Dr. Jordan in the following strain and follows at length in support of the American game:

"It may seem presumptuous for an undergraduate to engage in discussion with the distinguished president of a great university, but the impertinence of the act is moderated to a certain degree when the latter's discussion descends to the rudiments of football. Therefore, it is but natural that President Jordan's attack on American football should receive vociferous rebuffs from players and enthusiasts of the game."

Mr. Moores is the son of C. B. Moores of Salem, who was a resident of Oregon City a few years ago and was Register of the Land Office here. Considerable literary talent is shown in his argument as well as a thorough acquaintance with the great game.

Mrs. J. M. Lawrence, of Roseburg, Guest of Honor.

Mrs. Charles C. Miller was the hostess at a seven-course Easter luncheon given at her home on Seventh and Center street Saturday afternoon, when her sister, Mrs. James M. Lawrence, formerly of this city, but now of Roseburg, was the guest of honor. The decorations of the parlors were very pretty in Oregon grape. The dining room was in the Oregon grape blossoms and foliage and the decorations of the table were very unique. The place cards were ornamented with yellow miniature chickens, and the center piece was in the form of a nest filled with eggs and downy imitation chicks, who seemed to be peeping their little heads out of the newly hatched eggs. An elaborate repast was served by the hostess, who was assisted by Mrs. Bruce Zumwalt. There were about twelve guests present, all Oregon City friends of Mrs. Lawrence.

Baxter—Longwood.

Mrs. Longwood has resided in Oregon City for many years, where she is working in the mill. Mrs. Longwood left on Tuesday morning for Portland, where they will make their home.

THE POULTRY YARD.

If you have a sheltered place, not only to set the hens but also to rear the young, March hatches will be profitable. Barrels laid on their sides under a shed or some outbuilding, make ideal nests at this time of the year.

Do not make the common error of setting hens in the regular laying houses, and never be guilty of shutting up a hen on the nest. The barrel method is far better and is a small lath is run in front of the nest, the hen can get off and on her eggs as she deems best.

Some hens sit too closely to the nest, and others not close enough. It is not in the province of man to know just how long birds should remain on or off her eggs. Her judgment is best in such matters.

It is not advisable at this time of year to place more than eleven eggs under a hen, as those on the outer edge are apt to become chilled.

Do not disturb her while she is hatching, and leave the young in the nest for at least 24 hours. The youngsters need the warmth more than they do food.

For the first two weeks it is best to keep the hen and her young in a large house or coop, so that they can exercise and at the same time be protected from the weather. After that time they may be allowed outdoors during the middle of nice days.

The egg crop is increasing in bulk and decreasing in price.

All pens should be mated now, if intended for breeding purposes.

Be sure the new male birds you are using for breeding is no relative of the hens. You can not expect strong, rugged stock where there is a close relationship.

If it is intended to purchase eggs for hatching this season, the order had better be placed now, so that there will be no disappointment in not getting the eggs when wanted.

For strong fertility, try alternating male birds in the pens. Have either two males for each pen, or the males for two pens, using only one male at a time in a pen, and changing about twice a week.

Eggs from two-year old hens are apt to hatch best at this time, and the chicks will be more thrifty than those from pullet eggs.

As a rule the eggs from hens that die while laying during the winter will not be so fertile as eggs from hens that made but a fair showing.

WISE TALKS BY The Office Boy

Ma and I went out to call on some friends, who have just built a lovely little bungalow. Ma said to the lady: "Your house is fine but your garden is very small." "Yes," replied she, "it is small, but I will put my flowers in folding beds." Speaking of flowers, do you know why the lily is the emblem of Easter? It's not so much on account of its purity as to the fact that it can't be adulterated. You can't adulterate Easter Sunday and you can't adulterate any of the pure foods that are sold in this store, because they were made up pure and there's no room for any adulteration. This is a good time to stock up your larder for Easter. You know how willing we are to serve you. Open Saturday nights till 9 o'clock.
