

WILLAMETTE COMMENCEMENT

SCHOOL CLOSING IN THE PRETTY RIVER TOWN SATURDAY NIGHT.

CREAM ROSE FOR CLASS

Class Address to be Delivered by Rev. John M. Linden, Pastor Baptist Church.

The commencement exercises of Willamette school will take place at their school building on Saturday evening, June 6, at 8 o'clock.

The corps of teachers of Willamette school have given excellent satisfaction in that school district and it would be greatly to the advantage of the patrons and directors as well, if this same efficient corps were retained even at advanced salary.

- We append the programme of the exercises, which will be carried out with the same degree of efficiency as characterizes the work of the school:
- March.....Selected
- Miss Alice M. Goetting

GIVE INTERESTING PROGRAM.

Prof. Frank Rigler, City School Superintendent, of Portland to Give Address.

The commencement exercises of the Barclay High school will be held at Shively's opera house on Tuesday evening, June 16. There will be twelve graduates this year who will be presented with diplomas, who are as follows: Edna Willard Kinney, Helen Bessie Wilcox, Bertha Anna Wourms, Laura Ekhern, Wallace B. Caulfield, Raymond F. Olson, Sedonia Shaw, Margaret Elizabeth Lynd, Walter W. Hart, Elizabeth Jane Cooper, Lionel Gordon, Keith Rowland. The valedictory address will be delivered by Miss Laura Ekhern, and the salutatory by Miss Bertha Wourms. Rev. T. F. Bowen, rector of the St. Paul Episcopal church, will offer the invocation, and City School Superintendent Frank Rigler, of Portland, will deliver the address to the graduating class and present the graduates with their diplomas. There will be a musical and literary program, which is now being arranged. Prof. Rigler was being school superintendent for several years in Oregon City.

Mount Pleasant School Closes. The Mount Pleasant school closed at that place on Thursday afternoon with appropriate exercises, and there was a large attendance to witness the exercises. The morning was taken up with a literary program, and was followed by a dinner served in the school house. It has been planned to give a basket dinner in the grove nearby, but owing to the inclemency of the weather, the dinner was served in the auditorium of the school building.

County School Superintendent T. J. Gary was present and gave an excellent talk on the work of the schools, and his remarks were greatly appreciated by the patrons of the school. A. C. Warner, of Mount Pleasant also gave a talk on the work of the school and of the satisfaction in the manner of the school was managed this year under the competent instructor.

After the dinner was enjoyed, games were indulged in by the young people. It is presumed that the directors of Mount Pleasant school will hire an extra teacher for next term of school, as there were so many more pupils this term than heretofore and at present the one teacher has the eight grades.

ENEMY OF BAD MEN

Exploits of Pat Garrett, Slayer of "Billy the Kid."

SKILLED REVOLVER SHOT.

How Hunter of Notorious Outlaws Who Recently Died With His Boots on, Disposed of a Horse Thief—Way "the Kid" Was Killed.

Patrick F. Garrett, the former sheriff of Dona Ana county, in Texas, who was recently shot and killed by J. Wayne Brantle, a youthful ranchman, one of his tenants, near Las Cruces, N. M., in a dispute over a ranch lease, won popular fame in 1892 when he put to an end the bloody career of "Billy the Kid," the twenty-one-year-old bandit, who had killed twenty-one men "just to see them kick." For two years or more "the Kid" had been the terror of New Mexico with his thieving, marauding and his frequently recurring man killings. He had met all comers, and they were easy, but he hadn't met Pat Garrett. When he did, he erred.

Garrett had first come into notice as a foe of "bad men" in New Mexico about two years before he finally hunted down and killed the notorious "Kid," and he was anything except a green man at the game of fighting desperate criminals when the climax of his career came. Along about 1878, when Garrett was first made sheriff of Lincoln county, largely through the influence of General Law Wallace, then governor of New Mexico, no one knew much about the young officer or of his mode of handling a gun, says the Kansas City Star. One day a friendly desperado, attracted by Garrett's innocent appearance, took him aside for a bit of counsel and advised him to go back to Texas, where there were lucid intervals of peace sometimes.

"This country is too warm for the like of you," urged the desperado, "and you'll not last through the summer."

"Thanks," drawled Pat Garrett, "I can stand considerable heat, and I guess I'll stay."

It was said of Garrett that he could pull and shoot in about the time it takes a fly to get from under the hand that tries to catch it, and it seems to have been literally true.

Garrett gave the first demonstration of his skill with the revolver for the benefit of a western gentleman indulging in a little western saloon merriment. The gentleman, one Greenfelt, with a weakness for other men's horses, was amusing himself in a saloon making a couple of men dance by shooting at their feet. A third, whose perturbed skill or shiftness had met the disapproval of the horse thief, lay on the floor with a bullet inconveniently concealed in his person when Pat Garrett casually dropped in.

"Three hands around!" whooped the horse thief, shifting his pistol toward Garrett, and almost on the last word he lunged forward on his face with a bullet through his heart. The last sound he heard in this world was Garrett's drawing comment: "You're a poor caller."

Garrett had a number of other adventures before he finally came to the point in his life where "Billy the Kid" demanded his attention. But that time finally came. The bandit had just been out on one of his usual forays, which terminated in a saloon brawl and the ruthless killing of a man. It was the outlaw's twenty-first victim and his last. When Garrett set out for "the Kid" he departed on no ordinary mission even for a man used to the capture and killing of border outlaws. The bandit was a wild and lawless youth, cunning, brave and dashing and as clever and fast with a gun as any man that ever trod the west, even though he was only a boy in years. Billy was both unscrupulous and cunning, albeit not without a taven of chivalry and romance. His adventures had been numerous, and he was New Mexico's desperado hero, but Garrett didn't mind. When the plucky sheriff overtook the bandit, "the Kid" took a look at his opponent, whom he knew immediately by repute, and decided that it was better to give up. He was tried and convicted of murder and sentenced to death. But the bandit was destined to die in another fashion than on the scaffold. Two careless deputies were outwitted, and he escaped.

A less experienced man would have gone out in pursuit while the trail was hot. Not so Garrett, who knew the ways of the desperate and wily outlaw. Instead he set out for the Maxwell ranch, near Carizoo, in Lincoln county, where "the Kid" had his sweetheart. Garrett and his men lay in wait until they saw a man dodge into the house under cover of the night. Garrett single handed slipped in after him and posted his men on the porch. Garrett knew Maxwell and walked to his room to ask whether the bandit had come in. Maxwell was asleep and had to be awakened. He knew nothing of "the Kid" and wasn't expecting him, but Garrett was pretty certain and on guard. He had just turned from Maxwell's bed in the darkness when "the Kid" entered the room. There was a tense moment. The bandit advanced to the bed, believing to speak to Maxwell. "Who are they?" he asked, noticing the men on the porch.

In an instant he knew that Maxwell was not alone. The boy bandit made a quick, catlike move backward and whipped out his gun with incredible swiftness, but he was yet too slow. A bullet from Garrett's gun made him a bandit no longer. Garrett killed his own prophecy that he would die with his boots on.

The marriage of Miss Matilda Smarner, of this city, and August Guenther, a prosperous young farmer of Shubel, was solemnized at the residence of Father Hillebrand on Monday afternoon. The wedding was a very quiet one, and after the marriage ceremony the young couple left for their future home at Shubel, where the groom has a farm. The bride was prettily attired in white silk and her wedding veil was caught in place by Orange blossoms. She carried an arm bouquet of carnations, and the bridesmaid, Miss Justin, wore white swiss and carried pink roses. Phillip J. Sinnott acted as best man.
