FARM BUSINESS.

Methods of Farmers' Co-operative League in Germany.
American Agriculturists, Particularly Grangers, May Get a Hint From Their German Brothers in the Matter of Co-operating That May Be of Advantage to Them.

During the latter half of the nineteenth century associations formed among the agricultural classes of Germany did much to promote scientific farming, and in more recent years they have extended their influence with the advancement of technology. These local societies, says a recent consular report of Consul General Thackara at Berlin, have united into branch societies, circuit and district societies, which form the basis or nucleus of the two general German agricultural organizations of the present time.
On May 15, 1909, the Imperial Agricultural organization, according to its annual report, the last available, embraced sixty-seven circuit unions, made up of 18,333 local societies. The total membership of these societies was then 1,575,000. There were 12,584 saving and loan societies, 2,128 co-operative purchasing societies, 1,900 dairy societies and approximately 1,501 societies devoted to various other objects.

A summary of the operations for the fiscal year 1907, representing 11,039 savings and loan societies of the Imperial organization, with a total individual membership of 1,059,848, showed the following: Total assets $372,204,209 Total liabilities 371,561,138 Loans to members on current account 88,383,070 Loans to members for definite period 213,197,003 Deposits of members who received loans 38,404,496 Credit balance due to members end of 1907 4,581,266 Total receipts and expenses 852,175,820 Cost of administration 1,411,025 Total deposits of savings 98,517,371

The General Organization. The annual report of the General Agricultural organization, made October, 1909, shows it to have a membership of 5,172 local societies. The latest available statistics of this group are for the year 1907. At that date there were 4,100 local societies, having a membership of 406,819 persons. The following data are given in this report: Total assets $116,724,891 Total liabilities 116,437,787 Outstanding loans and credits 71,940,027 Outstanding loans to members in 1907 17,008,461 Credit of members 4,350,528 Savings deposits end of 1907 92,825,820 Reserve fund end 1907 12,500,235 Business credit of members and 1907 participation in business 862,700 Total business receipts and expenditures 539,967,340

The following statistics represent the new business transacted by the savings and loan societies of the General Agricultural organization for the year stated above: Loans and money paid out for purchases 919,939,861 Paid out to members in course of year 23,111,579 Paid by members 13,225,647 Repayment on loans 12,364,855 Savings paid in 34,734,857 Cost of administration 701,874

The Co-operative Purchasing society is the second in number and in importance of any group of the imperial organization. There were on May 15, 1909, 2,128 local societies, having an average membership of 109 persons each society. The annual report of 1907 gives the latest data of the business done by this group of the imperial organization. At this date there were twenty-seven circuit unions, composed of 1,983 local societies, with a total membership of 213,074 persons: Assets $13,081,544 Liabilities 13,779,366 Reserve fund 1,135,743 Credit balance of members end of 1907 68,037 Value of merchandise purchased 22,768,776 Cost of administration 600,548

The average purchase per person during six consecutive years, beginning in the year 1902, is as follows: $59.90, $60.93, $64.02, $88.06, $94.72, $104.90 respectively. The principal articles making up this amount in the following order of value were fertilizers, feedstuffs, seed, coal and agricultural machinery. The working capital of the co-operative purchasing societies for this period was, during the year 1906, $10,658,704, approximately 62 per cent of the value of purchases made for the members, and for the year 1907, $12,779,966, or about 60 per cent of the value of the purchases made. The surplus shown in the report given amounts to $4.28 per member. It will be observed that the cost of administration is less than the favorable balance shown by the surplus and is approximately $3.09 for each member.
