There is a state law requiring that thistles and obnoxious weeds be cut. Has the city council repeated this provision in the city limits? It would appear so from a stroll through the residence section. Our streets and curbs look far worse than any country road in Clackamas county. If the city can't compel this cleanup, let the state.

John Sigurd Anker, of Redmond, Or., has been elected principal of the high school, to succeed Theodore F. Steuberg, who failed to file his acceptance within the five day time required by the rules of the board of education. The position was accordingly declared vacant. Mr. and Mrs. George Ogle, of Canby have been in Oregon City the past few days looking after legal matters at the court house.

The W. O. T. U. of Oregon City will meet with Mrs. R. W. Parker at Gladstone next Tuesday, September 12, at 2:30. All members are urged to be present.

The case of J. M. Rutter against Cline Cole, on the charge of assault, was tried before Justice Samson Tuesday and Cole was acquitted. The trouble was a quarrel of some days ago over a wood pile in the highway.

Oregon City's common drinking cup yet stays on the job, despite the order of the state board of health abolishing it in public places in Oregon. Wonder if the city gets around this on the ground that the city is not a public place?

Frank Rain, whose real name is Frank Dunlap, and who celebrated labor day in strenuous style Monday, was fined $20 and given a twenty days' jail sentence by Recorder Stipp. He promptly paid the fine and then the jail sentence was remitted.

Head Council Voak, of the Woodmen of the World, was entertained by Willamette Falls Camp Tuesday night, and a splendid time was enjoyed.

Mayor Brownell gave an address, and later on an smoker was enjoyed. Mr. Voak is touring the northwest in the interests of the order.

You wouldn't think it, but the motor vehicle law gives the pedestrian an equal right with the auto on cross walks, and you haven't got to jump sideways to get off the earth just because a driver blows his horn. But we wouldn't advise you to stand on your legal rights in Oregon City, or later on the crosswalk. It's cheaper to hump than to pay hospital bills.

Auto owners have been experimenting with mirror reflections in the tunnel at the foot of the south end road and the city council has been asked to take the matter up. There is a sharp right angle just through the tunnel, and on account of the long hill autos usually go through the tunnel at a sharp clip, to get a start. And this point is very dangerous, for the reason that a driver of an auto or team cannot tell what is coming. It is claimed that a large mirror will solve this problem and make safe this dangerous turn.

Mrs. Lelle Bier, sister of Linn E. Jones, of this city, whom the Courier reported as dangerously ill last week, has improved slightly during the past few days, being able to take a small amount of nourishment. Mrs. Bier, who resides at Salem, went to Newport to remain sometime with Mrs. Jones during the summer, and while there was taken dangerously ill. Physicians are endeavoring to build up the patient with the hopes that an operation and hospital care will restore health.

Rev. Dr. George E. Paddock, of Portland, will speak at the Congregational church next Sunday morning and evening. Dr. Paddock is a man of impressive presence and a forceful speaker. As Superintendent of the State churches he has recently received more than forty applications from Congregational ministers desiring to locate in Oregon so the vacancy left by Rev. Mr. Proctor will probably soon be filled. A number of Congregational families from the East are arranging to spend the winter in Oregon City while looking about for permanent locations. Some of these are men of means and will make investments.

Frank Rain, a farmer, came in to celebrate labor day Monday, and according to police stories he did a thorough and scientific job. He took on a load of booze and then got noisy and very conspicuous. He evidently thought he was mayor, chief of police and street commissioner. Chief Shaw held him up and warned him that if he didn't drop some of his jobs and keep more quiet he would give him another one--in the jail. Rain continued to be busy and noisy, so Chief Shaw gathered him in. In the jail Rain went after everything that wasn't nailed down and turned it over. He pulled down the stove pipe and broke up the furnishings until he was finally put in a dark cell.

RUSSIAN GLIMPSES.

Diary of an Oregon City Boy on His Way to China.

The following letter is a daily diary of Kenneth Latonrotte on his trip through Russia to China:

Monday evening, Aug. 8, 1910.

We have just crossed the Japanese river. (I believe that in the way it is spelled). The days' ride has been a beautiful one, although somewhat warmer than yesterday. Nearly all day we seem to have been climbing in among low hills and long slopes. The country has been wooded, not with as heavy timber as we have on the coast, but with pine or fir or trees that look like them. The country reminds me much of Montana as one enters the Rockies from the east, and I can hardly realize that this is not America. Only this is so much warmer than America and so much less settled. The Russians have been here almost from the time of the Mayflower in America, and yet this is still a wilderness. Occasionally one finds quite a town on the railway, but one has the strange feeling of being in a bit of traveling civilization, a railway train on a narrow track of steel in the midst of a primeval wilderness. One likes to dream about the wonderful resources of the land we are passing through, its great rivers, its immense plains so fertile and well watered, its mountains, its forests, and the mineral resources which lie hidden as yet. The land but waits the touch of a great people to spring into life and to become the home of teeming millions, the seat of a great civilization. Who will settle it? Will the Russians or will the Chinese spread with the coming of new life and found here a greater empire?

When one thinks of the great stretches of the globe which are not occupied, the part which mankind occupies sinks into insignificance, and our own littleness impresses one, and the possibilities of the race as well. One longs to live for some thousands of years and watch developments. But if one faith is true, we shall be able to see what is going on and to live for more than a thousand years.

Today at one of our stops many of the passengers made a dive for a spot behind a house. It was a spring of cold water from which one dared not drink, a rare thing in these parts. I filled a kettle for my missionary friends and we enjoyed a long, cool drink. It may have been unhygienic but if it was it belied its looks.

We are delayed for an hour or more by an accident ahead of us--an engine of the track or something. I have been out for an hour's walk with my English friend. The air is wonderful, like our mountain air at home, and the stars are clear as diamonds. The old familiar stars are there, the Great Dipper, the North Star and the rest, and I think of them as having looked down on all of you a few hours before this.

Another week should see me in Peking and two weeks more in Kiating. It will be a genuine relief to get to a place where I can put down my suit cases and stay for a time. When I get to Charepha I propose to stay anchored for some time. Any one who dares to offer me a position as traveling agent for anything, from missions on down, will do so at the peril of his life.

The country has been interesting, rolling, timbered, much like America, and I still feel as though I were in the States. The weather is warm, but not at all uncomfortably so. We had a heavy hail storm this afternoon, which cooled things off.
