OLD PERSIAN RUGS.

They Retain Their Sheen

Spite of Their Great Age. you have doubtless observed that, though made of wool, it had the sheen of velvet. This was due partly to the excellence of the dyes and the work manship, but partly also to the fact that it had never known the touch of a shoe, but had been walked over in stockinged feet. If a man should enter your drawing room and stand on the sofa and upholstered chairs it would appear no more outrageous to you than it does to a Persian to walk with shoes upon his rug.

It seems impossible that such beautiful thing as a Persian rug should be produced on the rudest of looms, consisting, as they do, merely of crooked. irregular beams of wood roughly fastened together. The rude construction of the loom explains why it is that every genuine Persian rug of any length is more or less crooked. This is because after part of it is woven it must be removed from the loom and lowered, and on so crude an affair it is impossible to get the warp of the second part exactly straight with that of the first part.

Until quite recently each province an individuality of its own, and no two rugs were identical in design. The weaver copied designs and effects from trees and flowers or from common objects in everyday use. Sometimes a verse from the Koran or a stanza of a poem in the graceful, in tricate Arabic character formed part of the pattern.-New York Sun.

In "Mustangs, Busters and Outlaws of the Nevada Wild Horse Country." in the American Magazine, Rufus Steele writes of the capture of a splendid wild stallion that had long eluded cap ture. He was an "outlaw." Writes Mr. Steele: "Until we saddled him we did not realize his desperation. We fastened the riata to his front feet. When he tried to run away we jerked his feet from under him, throwing him heavily As he attempted to rise we threw him again and repeated the maneuver until exhaustion necessitated his capitulation. But his surrender was only tem porary. For three years we tried to break him, using every artifice known to us. As quickly as one man gave up the task another would try to conquer bim, but every time a human being approached or tried to bridle or saddle him he would bite victously. while his eyes, protruding from the sockets, blazed flery red with bate. As the cinch was drawn tight the outlaw, if upon his feet, invariably reared straight up, poised upon his hind legs, then hurled himself backward to the ground. We always mounted him while he was tied down, and to 'stay' after be gained his feet called for action which boiled a day's work into thirty minutes of struggle.

"His end was tragic as his career. In making an attempt at escape by jumping out of a stockade corral he misjudged the distance and became impaled on a jarged post, and a 44 was turned loose upon him to end his suftering."
