Oregon City. Editor Courier: From your outline of the proposed convict bill in last week's Courier, 1 would judge the state was going into the cattle shipping business, with men for cattle.

The writer of the above has slim grounds for such a contention.

The state will not go into the cattle business nuder the proposed convict law any more than it does now under the present laws, which permit the working of convicts.

There are two classes of idle men in Oregon today and they are both big classes. Armies would better describe

One class is or men who want work, will take any work and are horestly hunting work.

The other class is made up of men who wouldn't get near enough to a steady job to see what it looked like, if it was offered to them. You couldn't lead them up to daily work. They shy at routine worse than a farmer's horse at an auto. They come to the Willamette valley because it is out of winter and out of jobs, and because they know the worst punishment the cities and towns give them is a night's lodging and a warning to hike in the morning.

To the men who are honestly looking for work but can't find it, a job on the roads, with food, shelter and 25 cents a day is a lot better than nothing. And to the fellow who won't work, Splendld Big Success.

To give the details and all the in side of Oregon City's first poultry show would be like telling a story twice. All who attended know how great a success it was and those who did not attend hadn't ought to know. Two or three fellows got their heads together over the propposition one day and started it, and it just naturally jumped into a great, big, lurid suc-cess-so great that it has already be-come an annual affair.

There were over 300 birds entered, there were cats, rabbits, dogs; there was bang up music; there were class speakers, there were specialties, there was genuine entertainment and good, practical education. It was a
