Up Saltpeter Creek

A Story of Ranch Life

By CLARISSA MACKIE

The Chinese cook had spilled hot bean soup on Harry Barry's tumaculate white shirt front, and the scared Celestial had escaped from the room under a fusilade of pistol shots that all found lodgment in the oak beamed ced-

"You ought not to put on that tiled shirt till after supper," admonished the Crane as the wrathful Harry wiped the soggy mess from his bosom. "It's taking a risk wearing anything decent at this table nowadays."

"And why?" exploded Harry, mindful of the fact that this was his only clean white shirt and his call upon the pretty Widow Clancy must lack that sartorial compliment.

"The chink's in love." was the

"In love?" "Who with?"

"Didn't know there was a Chinese girl within a thousand miles of the Lone Bull.'

"Can't be find any other way of expressing his love than by acting like a blamed idiot? Of course this last remark came from

Harry Barry, who was consuming what remained of the soup in his plate. "They generally do-only it takes different forms." observed Gabriel mild-

A chuckle ran around the table. Under cover of its good nature Wah Sung pushed open the swinging door, peered fearfully around the edge and sidled in with a great dish of steaming hot potatoes.

Perhaps he was nervous, it might be that he was in love. At any rate, when his mild brown orb met the steely glare of Harry Barry's usually amiable eyes he set the dish of potatoes upon the table with such frantic haste that the largest and hottest rolled from the pyramid and landed u, on Mr. Barry's hand.

Wah Sung emitted a desolate wall as Harry Barry leaped from his chair and caught him by the neckband of his cotton blouse and shook him vigorously.

"Suffering cats! What's the matter with you?" yelled Mr. Barry excitedly. "Can't you throw down a dish of potatoes without stampedin' 'em all over the table?"

"Me solly-velly solly." mouned Wah Sung. "That helps a lot," observed Harry bitterly. "Me sick in the head-velly sick in the head; me do' know what to do," added Wah Sung pitifully. The cattleman's quick sympathy was to the fore at once. "What's the matter, boy? Have you told the boss that you're sick?"

"It's your heart, boy, not your head. You want to see doctor, eh?"

Wah Sung writhed bashfully under the gaze of seven pairs of eyes. "Nono see doctor," he mumbled, edging toward the door. "Me allee light velly soon. Me go for walk. Excuse, I get rest supper."

"Going for a walk, ch?" questioned Gabriel sharply. "You think a walk up Saltpeter creek do you good. Wah

The Chinaman shivered as with ague. and his countenance turned from yellow to gray. His lips parted in an attempted smile as he shook his head. "Oh, no, no, me no never walk up Sal'peder creak! Me walk velly diffiunt way!"

"Humph! Let bim go, Harry." was Gabriel's advice. When the Chinaman's slippers were once more slap ping around the kitchen floor Harry Barry resumed his seat and joined the broad grin that went around the table. "What is it-love?" he inquired.

"You oughter know, being a sort of judge of symptoms," commented Jim Lewis dryly. "What about yourself?" retorted

Harry Barry. "You oughter knowbeen married three months, haven't you?"

"Stop your wranglin', boys," interpolated the Crane, unjointing his lean form and taking advantage of Wah Sung's absence from the room to express his opinion. "Listen to me. I've seen the chink going up the creek every afternoon after dinner.

'What is there up Saltpeter creek?" asked Jim Lewis, lighting a cigarette. "Nothing but the springs that I know

It was a bright moonlight night, and he resolved to ask Mrs. Claney to ride with him up Saltpeter creek and investigate what lay beyond. The romance involved might lure her into the

It did. She was warmly interested in the story of the despairing Chinaman, and the suspected love affair that might be at the bottom of his erratic actions

"How long has he acted that way. Harry?" she asked, as they rode side by side up the trail, her hand in that of her sweetheart's, "About three months. Ever since he

"Poor fellow," sighed Mrs. Clancy. and Harry Barry leaned over and kissed her lips

When they reached the springs they could see that the trail entered a thicket of thorns, but Harry investigated and found that the way had been cunningly cleared of thorns, so that a person might pass through. They left their horses at the springs, and Harry. leading the way, they pushed through the thicket to emerge on the other side into an open sandy space dropping down the hillside that formed one boundary of Lone Bull ranch.

A faint light pricking through the gloom of another thicket on the hillside lured them down until they stood before a small cable thatched with branches and almost concented from the view of the ensual passerby.

Then Mrs. Clancy looked through a corner of the pane from which the calico inner curtain had swung back, revealing the interior of the one roomed cabin. She looked and looked, finally reaching out and drawing Harry to thirst. ward her until their faces touched.

They looked upon a little home. It might have been picked up out of any city in China and dropped there on this Ionely Montana biliside. What marvelous force had enabled the small Chinaman to secretly bring from great dis tances all the little household gods that meant home to him? Love, of course.

The walls were hung with gayly printed cottons, and in one corner where a small altar had been erected for his ancestral tablets there was a square of rich silk embroidery. Little bronze vessels stood on the altar, and on a bracket there was an image of a ing of incense smoking before it.
