JOHN STARK'S COLUMN OF QUESTIONS AND COM-MENTS.

Things in State and Nation.

"Outlaw" Reed died there send Caruso's famous monkey; he is used to the antics of good society.

The Oregonian says that the ten embassys pay $17,500 each "but their incumbents are required to spend so much money in order to uphold the dignity of the country on the scale but millionaires can afford to accept the posts and these must be content When Adam met Eve he was bashful with glory as compensation."

I am aware that I will be laughed at as being from the country, especially by some jays who have heads for no other purpose but a convenient place to put a mouth, so as to avoid the trouble to feed them by hypodermic methods.

However I want some one to tell me if this government is in duty bound to furnish the millionaires with "reputation" so that these guys will have enough social standing to be permitted to spend their money among these two legged blow flies. We habitually say "their money" but will it be out of place while discussing such an exalted position, to ask if it is by right their money when their country's workmen are starving? Now don't tell me I am impertinent and that our best people do it so it must be right; for I never like poll parrots during the moulting season.

Have you ever noticed the waste many duplications in business, say for instance the delivery of milk. She looked up and looked down, an How many wagons will deliver on one street? In the large cities the milk business is becoming trustified, with the result that the city is laid out in districts, which eliminates the waste of effort. Right here let me say that perhaps I am the only friend the trusts have, for the trusts are labor saving devices. Those fool politicians who propose to smash the trusts are just like the journeymen tailors were when sewing machines came into use. They smashed some machines because they lost their jobs. Had these tailors but secured the ownership of the machines they could have mastered the situation. The same rule applies to giant corporations. Let the nation own the
