925 Bills Proposed.

The last day for introduction of bills brought forth an avalanchie in both the senate and the house that nearly swamped the clerks. With adjournment 325 bills had been introduced in the senate so far this session and an even 600 in the house, or a total of 925 bills for the session. This is just 200 more bills than were introduced two years ago.

Several Important Measures Passed. Among the important measures passing the house were the workmen's compensation act and the board of control bill. Both branches passed the widow's pension bill and the Multnomah school teachers' measure. The home rule amendment was defeated in the house. The senate passed the minimum wage bill for women and minors, the measure placing all charitable institutions under state supervision, the bill amending the direct primary and the railroad headlight measure. No large appropriation bills have passed either house. The outlook for the passage of good roads legislation next wock is excellent.
