LOOK OUT YOU KIDS

Quit the Bird Shooting or the Officer Will Get You

There has been much complaint made to the Clackamas County Humane Society of this city in regard to boys and men shooting birds. These have been killed either with air guns or 22-rifles and bean shooters. Boys seen in this city with air guns stationed beneath cherry trees and shooting at the little feathered beings. On Clackamas Heights are to be seen dead birds lying on the ground and it is the intention of the Clackamas County Humane Society to take up this matter immediately and bring the guilty parties to justice, whether boys or men. The Society is composed of many members and these are to keep a sharp lookout for those having in their possession air guns, rifles or bean shooters. There is a fine not less than $5.00 nor more than $10.00 for those killing birds. No doubt the Humane Society of this city will have assistance from the Audubon Society of Portland in this matter. It is also the duty of the police to assist in this matter, and no doubt they will keep a lookout for the guilty persons and bring their cruelty to an end.

During the spring many beautiful birds have come into the city and in most cases interest has been taken in their behalf. Several new species have been noted. One admirer of the birds had noticed a new species and had watched the birds make the nest and the mother bird set on her eggs. But it was but a few days after that the mother bird was found dead on the ground, killed with a rifle. So far there have been no arrests made, but no doubt there will be several parties are known to have been making targets of birds and they will be carefully watched so that they will not repeat the offense.

SATURDAY NIGHT SERMONS BY REV. SAMUEL W. PORTIS, D.D.

THE FACE ILLUMINED. Text, "And he was transfigured before them."—Matt. xvii. 2.

One flash of lightning reveals the landscape—thenceforth a memory. The traveler's road leads over a high hill. From the summit he can see sparkling river, many shaded green of foliage and, above all, the flashing spires of the distant city, his goal. It is a foregleam that floods his eyes and memory. Then he descends the valley, the plains and lowlands of his journey. But the vision of the city's glory is forever in his mind's eye.

It is afternoon on the side of Mount Hermon. The Nazarene is taking three of his most sympathetic disciples, the crown, the flower of the little apostolic band, up to the heights. Not many words are spoken. A climax is evidently at hand. Men talk on levels, not much in ascents. In the distance a caravan of camels is coming from Joppa. Back of them the mountains of Palestine rear their heads. In front the sky and sea seem one at the far horizon. At sunset summit is reached, 9,200 feet above sea level. The western sky changes from scarlet and purple to yellow and gold and ivory. The light trembles—and then darkness. A few lights flash like fireflies in distant Caesarea. It is now night. Night is the time for vision. Isaac goes out into the fields at eventide to meditate. At night David prostrates himself before God. By night Nicodemus comes to the Master for conference. Jesus is seen at prayer. The three disciples also pray, but are soon heavy with sleep.

The Face Illumined. While they slept Christ prayed. They woke with subconsciousness of spiritual nearness. Possibly the Master's clothing first caught their drowsy eyes. Garments are incidental in God's sight, but Christ's raiment was shining as lightning. No linen could compare with its dazzling whiteness. The outward is minor, not major. Dress may proclaim the man, but there must first be a man. A second glance showed "his face did shine." Luke adds, "as he prayed." Prayer alters the face, illumines the features with "a light that never was on sea or land." There is a beauty not of the earth. The body is the lantern; the soul is the light. An inner and an outer light differ. Put the light within an alabaster vase or marble bust, place the electric bulb within the exquisite Favrite glass lamp shade, hold the candle behind the hand-stand; is translucent to inner light. Stephen's face looked like an angel. Pray in order to look. Spiritual beauty is the chiseling of God. The human face is lighted by joy, darkened by sorrow. It is not only a doornail on which is written our name, but the window through which one's soul peers.

A Heavenly Triumvirate. "Then appeared unto him Moses and Elijah." Like attracts like. Each one a man of prayer, fasting and holy mount vision of God. Three links in the chain—law, prophecy, gospel. After many centuries—Moses 1,500 years, Elijah 1,000 years—they meet as though contemporary. What about the theory of nonconscious existence between our death and Christ's second coming? It must go to pieces on this rock. How about recognition of the dead? If we could recognize those we have never seen in the flesh, how much more those of our own flesh and blood! "Talking with him." You may talk with rare souls on the mount of congeniality or with low spirits on the plain of the commonplace—that rests with you. Great men talk of great themes. Men may be measured by their governing thoughts. Walk with Milton rather than Zola. Commune with angels, you will learn the language of heaven; go with wolves, you will learn to howl. Christ's approaching death was their theme. "Peter answered." Always Peter! Ever see a young greyhound leaping with his paws against everything? "Let us make here three tabernacles." That's impossible. Already the light is dissolving like the colors of a sunset. We lose by attrition.

The Cloud's Lining. A voice is speaking from the clouds. "This is my blessed Son." That's something to remember in dark days to come when men are shouting "blasphemer," "devil" and "crucify him!" Clouds are dark only on their under side. In every cloud listen for God. Jehovah dwelt above the tabernacle in a cloud. It was a cloud that received the ascending Saviour. The disciples will never forget that experience. In all probability the reflected light shone from them for many a day. I've seen folks who aforetime were heavy and hopeless featured. Then some night they went up into the mountain with their Lord. From that day their lives were different. It often takes some great experience to teach us that we are not only citizens of time, but of eternity. Requirements of either market place or graveyard insignificant except as they move us to consider they are but steps to higher things. If earth love transfigures, as the face of a maid in presence of her lover or a mother over her babe restored, how then must the divine love transfigure the human face when the Christ, "The Light of the World," shines from every window of the soul! Soon the mountain top experience must be translated into terms that will help when we get down on the plain.
