WOULD UTILIZE OUR EELS

Proposed Plant to Make Chicken Feed and Oil of Them

J. P. Kelley of Portland has been in the city this week interesting some of our people in a proposition that would not only rid our river of the eels, but would convert them into dividends.

His proposition is a small company and small plant to extract the oil from the eels and convert the flesh into chicken feed.

Mr. Kelley has taken the matter up with the master fish warden and he says about 100 ton of eels can be secured annually at the falls here. The oil is equal to whale and herring oil and finds a ready market, and the dried eels are said to be superior to all chicken feeds.

It will take about $1,000 to put in the plant and he says he has part of the money pledged.

PICTURE SIGNATURES.

Difficult to Find Sometimes and Not Always Reliable.

Many of the works of the old masters are not signed. Experts rarely rely on signatures alone in determining the authenticity of an old work, but trust rather to their knowledge of the painter's technic.

False signatures can be easily detected. Spirits of wine or turpentine will usually remove a name of later date than the painting. In the course of time signatures often become very difficult to find. Painted originally in a shade slightly lighter than the ground, perhaps, they sink in, darken and merge into the ground color or they are almost rubbed away by successive cleanings. Recognizable one day in a specially favorable light, they may not be visible again for weeks.

Experts speak of "will-o'-the-wisp" signatures, and many collectors have encountered accidental strokes and cracks that tantalizingly suggest a signature, though it can never be made definite. On the other hand, there have been remarkable cases of such marks, after careful study, resolving themselves into a famous name.

Sometimes the painter's name is most conspicuous—as, for instance, in Raphael's "Sposalizio" at Milan. Proud of having surpassed his master, the youthful genius wrote on a frieze in the very center of the canvas "Raphael Urbina."

Reynolds hardly ever signed his work. But upon the completion of the portrait of Mrs. Siddons as the "Tragic Muse" he wrote his name large on the gold embroidery of her dress. He was unable, he said, "to resist the temptation of sending my name to posterity on the hem of your garment."

With reference to unsigned paintings there is told in Germany an amusing story. Achenbach, the German artist, enjoyed a vogue about ten years ago. A certain collector had bought from an art dealer a marine represented as a genuine Achenbach. Afterward it was pronounced to be a copy. The buyer brought an action against the dealer, who turned the tables by declaring that his picture was genuine and the other was a copy.

Achenbach himself was summoned by the court to tell which was which. Amazed at the similarity of the two paintings, the artist gazed at them for a long time. Inspected them closely front and back and then frankly admitted that he could not tell which was the original and which the copy.—Harper's Weekly.

Bear's Grease.

In a recent volume of reminiscences the writer states that baldness is much more common now than in his early days and ascribes our loss of hair to the decrease in the use of "bear's grease." This pomade was made principally of lard, colored and scented, but "hairsdressers, many of whom called themselves 'professors,' used to advertise the slaughter of another fine bear, exhibiting, particularly in the Watworth road, a canvas screen depicting in glaring colors a brown animal of elephantine proportions expiring in a sea of gore."—London Standard.

Sunset and the Flag.

A stalwart sergeant in an artillery regiment stationed in one of the harbor forts walked into a store in upper Broadway the other evening at about 8 o'clock and demanded of the storekeeper the reason for having the stars and stripes displayed after nightfall.

"Isn't that all right, general?" asked the bewildered tradesman.

"I'm not a general," said the big soldier, "but it isn't all right to keep the flag out after sunset. Only during a siege is the flag displayed at night, and judging from your business, I don't think you're under siege."—New York Sun.

The History of the Key.

The key was one of the first things invented by man. The primitive key was probably a thorn or a splinter. Afterward fishbones seem to have come into use. Wooden pegs followed these. In modern times the process of manufacturing keys is very highly developed. Fifty years ago there were only some hundred varieties of keys, each having its special name and distinct use. Today they are legion.—Harper's Weekly.

BROKE UP THE GAMES.

Charley's Antics With His "Bread an' Butter an' Sugar On."

Charley was a nice husky boy, but he had one serious fault, which I deem it my duty to mention, although it was perhaps a natural symptom of real boyhood. In the middle of an exciting game of woolly-woolly-wolf, three-o'clock, nbs or shlny he would slip away home, to return presently with a perfectly paralyzing slice of bread an' butter an' sugar on.

Now, if you were ever a boy yourself you'll agree that Charley was very immoral to behave that way. The effect was always disastrous. The game would come to an immediate halt, while every kid in the bunch gazed longingly at Charley's lunch, each of us ruminating silently on the wisdom of a combined attack, since none of us would for a moment think of trying to share the tempting tidbit single handed. And that, too, you will say was natural enough if you've been a boy.

But the particular reason why Charley's offense was immoral was the way he carried his bread an' butter an' sugar on. He didn't hold it in the grasp of his hand like other boys; he elevated it daintily on the tips of his fingers and thumb, just as a waiter carries a tray. That, I say, was immoral. And he ate around it in concentric circles, ever approaching the supreme saccharine pinnacle of palatability at the geographical center of the slice. But long before he had circumscribed his luncheon the first time most of us would be scurrying for home to get the nearest imitation that long suffering mother could produce.—William Brady, M. D., in Outing Magazine.

THE FIELD OF VISION.

Even Persons With Normal Eyes Are Partially Color Blind.

The various tests for color blindness have come into practical use in the examination of railroad engineers and the like, where the ability to distinguish colors is necessary, so that these tests are no longer peculiar to the laboratory. But it is not generally known outside the laboratory that everybody is partially color blind—that is, in certain parts of the field of vision.

The most normal individual can see all the colors only when he looks directly at them. If looked at from an angle of about fifteen degrees red and green can no longer be seen, but in their places will appear shades of red
