THESE MEN ARE TRUE TO THEIR IDEALS

THU "boosting" is a fine art. It cannot be defined. Shouting for a better town, whooping up the locality's advantages, boasting of resources—all these are very well in their place. But true boosting is more than this. The real booster is a man who by his acts, his very life, his accomplishments, does something permanent for his community. He makes his life and his career a part of the progress of the place wherein he lives. Such men are the real boosters, the real leaders in any city or town. And this being the Booster Day number of the Courier, this paper has tried to pick the men who have been the true boosters of the county seat, and in a measure, of the whole county. It has selected these men for what they have done, or for what their lives as they are now living them, will drive them to do; and proud of every one, the Courier presents them to the public. There are other good men in the community—many of them, indeed—but in the representative group on this page the Courier feels that it is bringing before the public men of whom their fellow citizens should be proud, men who have the good of the community at heart; in short, men who truly reflect in their lives the true booster spirit.

L. ADAMS
A man who has always stood staunchly in line for all civic betterments L. Adams, proprietor of "Oregon City's busy store," has for 15 years been active in the commercial life of the county seat, and by his own efforts has built up one of the largest stores in the county. Mr. Adams has given much personal effort to placing Oregon City in the foremost rank of the state's communities, has been a consistent booster on all occasions, and has done much to make Oregon City what it is today.

JOHN F. ALBRIGHT
Councilman and fisherman, John F. Albright must be counted among the boosters of the community. Taciturn in speech, not much on the "hurry-hurry" Mr. Albright has fought in the council repeatedly for the things that have made for a better Oregon City. A champion of the pure mountain water supply, a leader in the passage of sanitary measures, and a firm advocate of economy, Mr. Albright has done perhaps more than any other councilman to serve the best interests of the taxpayers and the city.

GEORGE C. BROWNELL
Noted as a successful jury lawyer and a keen judge of human nature, George C. Brownell has won his way to fame in the Pacific Northwest by his own unceasing efforts. While a keen politician, his leadership has been maintained by the things he has accomplished for the state and for his own community. An orator of convincing ability, Mr. Brownell has been much sought after as a speaker and an advocate for big causes, and his record as a state legislator and as a man, show that he has ever had at heart the betterment of those among whom he has lived.

FRANK H. JOHN C., AND EDWARD J. BUSCH
Young in years, but with the real booster spirit bred in their minds, Frank H., John C. and Edward J. Busch are among the county seat's real enterprising builders. Associated with Frank Busch in the furniture business so long and successfully carried on by him in Oregon City, these three young hustlers will in a short time take over the entire management of the enterprise and will take their rightful place among the sterling businessmen of the community. All of them are interested in the civic betterment of the county seat, and have repeatedly in times past, shown their interest in public affairs by efforts they have made to bring to a successful conclusion improvements that have been undertaken by the leading men of Oregon City. The Busch boys believe in doing things, in having their work reflect their spirit, and in so conducting their business that it will be of lasting benefit to the city and to their patrons.

HON. J. U. CAMPBELL
Honored and respected as a jurist of the circuit court, the Hon. J. U. Campbell is truly a leading man in Clackamas county in all that the term implies. An impartial judge, well versed in law, yet with a warm spot in his heart for the unfortunate, Judge Campbell is one of the commanding figures of the bench. As a citizen he has ever been enlisted in the cause of the majority, and his influence has brought success to many improvements for the advancement of the community wherein he makes his home.

GRANT B. DIMICK
If Grant B. Dimick had done nothing else than carry on the fight for the construction of the Willamette Valley Southern railroad, he would have front rank in the army of true boosters. But not only has he given time, energy and years of his life to making this local enterprise a success, but in public life he has served the people in many official capacities. Always working for the best to be had Judge Dimick has proved himself a leader in many ways. His efforts have included a persistent campaign for the introduction of blooded stock on Clackamas County farms and ranches and in bringing many to see the economy of good foundation stock he has done as much as almost any one man can do for the community. Judge Dimick is one of the county's most able attorneys.

GILBERT L. HEDGES
A man of rare personal attainments and a skillful lawyer as well, Gilbert L. Hedges belongs in the ranks of the true boosters for what he has done and for the manner in which he makes his life true to his ideals. As county attorney he has filled the office with activity and skill, has won many cases for the people as a mass, and has always done what justice demanded. More cannot be said of any man in public life.

C. G. HUNTLEY
An ardent booster in every sense of the word, C. G. Huntley is so well known in Oregon City and the surrounding country that it is idle to attempt to catalogue his accomplishments. As a legislator he has served the people well, as a businessman he has made an enviable record, and as a leader in civic improvement work in the county seat he has ever been in the front ranks. Owing to his activity in work devoted to the advancement of Oregon City he has been made president of the county seat's new marching club, and as head of that organization he will do his full share to spread the fame and attractiveness of Oregon City throughout Pacific Slope communities.

LINN E. JONES
As a skilled pilot of the municipal ship of state, Linn E. Jones, mayor of Oregon City, has proven himself a master hand at the helm. Political rocks and whirlpools have no terrors for him, and with his eye ever fast upon the compass of public service, he has made possible continuous and steady municipal progress. A foe to hypocrisy, a firm believer in real economy, and a man of courage, Mayor Jones has the confidence of his fellow citizens to a flattering degree. Under his administrations Oregon City has been kept always in the lead in improvements, and much for the advancement of the city has been accomplished.

JOHN W. LODER
For twenty years a citizen of Oregon City, John W. Loder has a record of which to be proud. A graduate of the law department of George Washington University, at Washington, D. C., and an alumnus of McMinnville College, Mr. Loder has forged ahead steadily, and stands today one of Oregon City's "self-made men" worthy of being the example to all. Chosen City Recorder, he had faithfully performed the duties of this office, and as municipal judge he has won universal praise for the absolute justice of his rulings and decisions.

B. T. MCBAIN
Executive head of one of the largest mills that give Oregon City its magic payroll, B. T. McBain has found time in spite of his business cares to prove that he is a real booster and a servant of the public. His personal efforts and influence have been exerted to make successful many schemes for improving local conditions. He was one of the first to see the advantages of the pipe line now being built, and fought for it from the start. An advocate of good roads, he has steadily done what he could to bring the country and the city into closer touch, and his support has always been found ready for any worthy enterprise for the common good.

H. A. RANDS
A civil engineer who likes work for the sake of achievement, H. A. Rands has been identified with many enterprises that have made the West the country that it is today. Graduated from Cornell University, Mr. Rands for a number of years was engaged with the Federal Reclamation Service work in Oregon, Washington and Idaho, and later was on the staff of the Portland Railway, Light & Power company. His genius is built into many of the structural improvements of this concern, whose employ he left to take up the construction of the South Fork Pipe Line that will bring an abundance of pure water to Oregon City.

CHRISTIAN SCHUEBEL
Busy all the time. When you say that you have said the real thing about Christian Schuebel, lawyer, city official and foe of all things that are wrong. A man of tremendous energy, a legislator of renown, and the friend of his fellow man—even if it hurts him—Mr. Schuebel is always working for what he believes to be right. In his own community he is a dynamo of energy, systematizing what he finds jumbled, and trying ever to clean up
