Christmas Seals

By CLARISSA MACKIE

It was only a few days before Christmas, and little Amy Wells was so happy. The teacher had given her some Red Cross seals to sell, and when Miss Smith had distributed the red and white and green seals among her scholars she had explained to them all about the purpose of the Red Cross society and how the money earned would be used to help the wounded soldiers.

And she had not sold one single, solitary stamp of her twenty-five! How she had trudged around from door to door, only to meet the same kind smile and shake of the head! Amy told her mother, and when Mrs. Wells offered to buy all the stamps herself the little girl shook her head.

"I ought to be able to sell them outside my home, mother, dear," she said. "That would be real work." Mrs. Wells sighed and smiled. She couldn't very well afford to buy even the twenty-five stamps that Amy wanted to sell, for every penny was needed in that little household. Mr. Wells had died a year or two before, and Amy's mother had to sew for a living. She was very busy, for she was trying to finish some work so as to receive the money in time to buy something for Christmas.

"Kiss me, little daughter," Mrs. Wells said, with a smile, "and then carry this dress up to Miss Granger on the hill." The Grangers lived in a big house at the top of the hill. It was quite the largest house in Little River, and the three ladies lived there all alone with two servants. There were Miss Belle Granger, Miss Lucy and Miss Beth. They were not very young, but they were very kind and sweet.

The maid admitted Amy to the front hall, all warm and glowing from a great fire on the hearth. "How do you do, Amy? Wouldn't you like one of these little mince tarts?" And there was Miss Beth Granger with a plate of mince tarts. "Oh, thank you!" gasped Amy as she took one.

"Wait a moment and Annie will wrap it in a paper napkin so you can carry it home," said Miss Beth as she pressed a button for the maid. But when Annie came with the paper napkin, which was all gay with holly and Christmas bells, Miss Beth put all the mince tarts in it and gave it to Amy. "Oh, thank you so much!" repeated Amy, thinking how her mother would enjoy the tarts. "Mother sent the dress."

"My sister is trying it on," said Miss Beth. "Wait a moment, Amy, and I will get the money for you." She had just disappeared when Miss Lucy Granger came bustling through the hall. "I wonder if you would mail these little packages for me, Amy," she said. "I am so provoked because I have used up my Christmas seals."

"Of course I will mail the packages, Miss Lucy," said Amy; then she added shyly, "I—I have some Christmas seals if you would like them."

"You have? How very fortunate!" Amy told her about the seals and how she had been unable to sell even one of them. To her great joy Miss Lucy bought the whole twenty-five and put the money in Amy's pocketbook, together with a bright silver quarter for herself. "I hope you will have a very happy Christmas, dear," Miss Lucy said.

The next day Amy took the Red Cross money to her teacher, and Miss Smith told her she had done very well. Early Christmas morning the Granger auto car stopped before the Wells door, and the chauffeur brought in a great basket for Mrs. Wells. There was a new dress for Amy, with a warm cloak for her mother, besides a cunning doll. The bottom of the basket was filled with good things to eat.

"My Christmas week began with tears," laughed Amy as bright drops fell on her round cheeks, "and it is ending in tears too!" "Tears of happiness, darling," said her mother.

Santa Claus is Coming

Old Santa Claus is coming— The time is very near— Before we realize it Old Santa will be here.

He'll bring us sleds and wagons, And nuts and sugar plums, And dolls, and furs, and dresses, And balls, and swords, and drums.

He'll come when we are sleeping, Tucked in our beds so white, And all the stars are peeping At this, our Christmas night.

He'll come with smiles and blessings Along the milky way, And stop at every dwelling Where little children stay.

He'll garnish trees with presents And, while the world is still, With gifts the children asked for Each stocking he will fill.

But, better than all presents, He'll bring to us again The heartfelt Christmas wishes Of "Good will unto men." —Martha Coleman Sherman in Chicago Inter Ocean.
