

BANNER THOTS IN POETRY

YOUR MOTHER

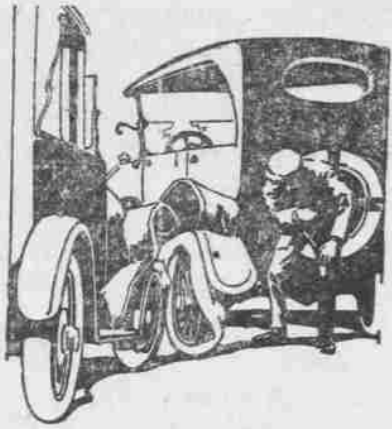

Ah, girl, look on this woman in your home
As you have never looked at her before;
Scan well this mother-creature of your own,
And pause a while to ponder o'er and o'er
The things that made her—make her—
—what you know—
Those things that work unseen within the heart—
She was a girl a few brief years ago,
Though now of youth she seems to have no part.
She, too, loved well the beauty of attire,

Her pulse was quick with all the joy you feel,
Her crave was for the baubles you admire,
Though she, too, had to conquer their appeal;
There lived in her the selfsame hunger; shining
Within her were the visions you behold,
But life came by, its sterner truths defining,
And now you see a woman, sagged and old.
Through all your helpless babyhood she hovered
Above you, giving of her strength alone,
Through all the years you've lived she's bravely smothered
A thousand longings you have never known;
Think you a woman's eyes forget their seeing,
When springtime finery is on display?

Think you she has no crave within her being
For gowns and bonnets, though she's old and gray?
Ah, little girl, she heeds your tones of pleading,
She senses many things you've never guessed,
And, underneath, her heart is oftentimes bleeding,
Although she answers curtly your request;
Go home tonight, whatever be your sorrow,
And kiss your mother. Note her brimming eyes,
And then observe, tomorrow and to-morrow,
The heart that she's been keeping in disguise.
You've taken blindly all her love and serving,
You've angry grown because it was not more;
What have you done, to make you so deserving?
What have you given—save heart-aches, score on score?
Denial is harder far than generous giving,
And hearts that love you shrink from such a task;
Trust in your mother's love; and in life's living
Play fair! and seek to serve as well as ask.

THE PEOPLE'S SAY

County Road Bonding Program
It would seem that our friends at Oak Grove could look away from Portland, as well as toward it, and see that it would pay them to develop taxable property in other parts of the county, toward an equality with their own. It is difficult to look through their eyes and see an advantage to anybody in moving a large section of Clackamas county into Multnomah thus adding to the political and economic power that is not now wisely and properly used. Maybe the advantage is to be to the head of the Jackson Club in giving him a chance to strengthen his political machine and give a better chance to claim the spoils that Andrew said belong to the victor. It would be an advantage to have the bedroom and the place of business in the same county. But then, do not build too many air castles for the bonds are not going to be recalled and that fact will automatically prevent the jump into Multnomah as it did before.

The delay in carrying out the road program, so far, has been a blessing in disguise as it has saved most of us from making the mistake of trying to make permanent paved roads with asphalt, which is a well proven impossibility. If asphalt was the only material for pavements, well made macadam would be preferable and more economical in the end. Concrete is now being contracted at less than asphalt and a 9 foot pavement 7 1/2 inches thick, can be made within the limit of $11,000 per mile and with the aid of the market road funds, can be made wider; though I think it would be better to make it 9 inches thick, leave the macadam at the center of the road and plan to build another 9 foot pavement at the other side in the future, which would make an ideal road.
Let us, from all sections of Clackamas county, get together on this road program, talk together, act together, work together and stay together for the common good. Let us realize that cooperative self preservation is the final law of nature.
Let us do unto others as we would have others do unto us and let us love our neighbors as ourselves.
Finally, fellow democrats, when it comes to selecting candidates and officers, I believe in a guaranteed analyses, truth in fabrics and I always look beneath the party label to see whether the contents are true to name, and I think we should tell Mr. Starkweather to go back and sit on the probationer's seat until he can develop his talent for leadership along true democratic lines. I have always admired his talents and if my political aspirations took the form of office seeking, I should envy his opportunities for advancement. But talents wrongly used are worse than wasted and opportunities can be thrown away. There has been many insinuations against lawyers but I will take a good lawyer in preference to a poor politician, a statesman and an honest man. He combined all four in one character and so there was but one man buried in his grave though all four may be inscribed on his tomb. The man counts more than the occupation.
