History Recorded in Tree's Rings

This is the butt of the giant sequoia of Yosemite National park which came to an end in the prime of its life when it was felled by a storm in 1919. At that time it was only 906 years old. Some trees in Yosemite are between 3,000 and 4,000 years old. For the benefit of visitors, the park naturalist, Ansel F. Hall, has measured off on the trunk the rings which mark the years when the Battle of Hastings was fought, America was discovered, and the Declaration of Independence signed, as well as other epochal years. The space between the thumb and forefinger measures the span of the human life.

GETTING STAND OF ALFALFA Iowa Farmers Secure Best Fields by Seeding During August and Without Nursey Crop.

Experience of many Iowa farmers and of the Iowa agricultural experiment station is that the surest method of getting a stand of alfalfa is to seed during August without a nursey crop on land which has been plowed in early summer and cultivated at ten-day intervals to kill weeds and conserve moisture. Objections to this method are that the land does not yield returns during the season preceding seeding, that it requires additional labor, and that grasshoppers frequently damage the alfalfa considerably on small acreages. However, general experience in Iowa justifies the method above suggested as it produces the best fields of alfalfa.
