WHITE PINE BLISTER RUST THREATENS

At the request of a Banner subscriber the following is printed with a desire to protect the timber and other trees of the state:

Until recently it was believed that the white pine blister rust did not spread to points east of the Cascades. However, last week it was found on cultivated English black currants and native white pines in the vicinity of Revelstoke and Beaton, B. C. These points are only about 100 miles north of the international boundary and are in the northern edge of the great white pine area which extends into Washington, Idaho and Montana. It is now evident that the disease is spreading rapidly and unless hurriedly checked it will in a short time be established in the Inland Empire white pine stands. The disease has also recently been found on English black currants in the southwestern corner of Pacific county, Washington. This indicates a rapid southern spread along the coast region and directly threatens the sugar pine stands of Oregon and California.

In order to check the spread of the blister rust it is necessary to determine the extent of its present distribution immediately. At this season of the year it is most easily detected on the leaves of currant and gooseberry bushes. The English black currant is most susceptible and if carefully inspected now would very likely show the disease if it is present in the locality. You can help a great deal by examining the leaves or the currants and gooseberries in your locality, especially the English black currant

WESTINGHOUSE BATTERIES

You owe it to an old friend

WITHOUT attention your battery loses its "pep" and power whether your car is running or not. It needs looking after by a specialist to prevent trouble cropping up that will cost you a needless amount of money. Drive in and have your battery inspected and, if necessary, conditioned. Then, adopt the Westinghouse plan conditioned. Then, adopt the Westinghouse plan of two inspections a month. It puts you under no obligations. We will not recommend a Westinghouse until you need a new battery.
