Auto Signals for Turning Now Standard Over Nation;

STOP—To signal your intention to stop, extend arm straight out with back of hand to rear of car

RIGHT TURN—To signal your intention to turn to the right, flex the left arm upward at the elbow and point the first finger to the right

Do you use the proper signals when driving your automobile? Automobile associations over the country are developing the theory that a large part of accidents on the roads come from the improper or misunderstood signals. Traffic regulations over the nation require signals in turning but observance of the law is not uniform enough to make the signals intelligible to all.

In the interests of standardization Collier's Weekly has gathered what are considered the five best signals and is urging their general adoption by all of the motorists.

The signals are published here through the courtesy of the Pacific Highway Garage.

BACK UP—First look back to see if the way is clear. Then extend arm with palm of hand to the rear and motion backward

TURN AROUND—To signal your intention to turn completely around, circle arm and hand three times backward
