Keep Faith And Youth In The Legend Of Dear Old Santa Claus

The sons and daughters of men are of two classes—not the rich or the poor, not the young or the old, not liberals or conservatives, nor even Aristotelians or Platonists, but those who believe in Santa Claus and those who do not.

Children are of the first and more glorious family. Hence they grow; hence they burst with life. They believe, and so have faith that good comes riding out of the air, with jingling bells and prancing reindeer. Its pack crammed with gifts, its round and smiling coachman breathing benevolence and cheerfulness and hastening to fulfill every wish that is dreamed on dented pillow. Alas! when doubt creeps in, when the eyes and ears of the spirit no longer see or hear and demand comes for physical evidence, then all the high faculties wither and pass away.

The walls of the prison house tend to close around the growing child. He credits the slander that there is no Santa Claus. Poison enters into him and he degenerates into an animal that merely touches or tastes. Thrice blessed are they who are able to keep an imagination green and lasting and to subdue or drive away all forces that would throttle it. The rites of Christmas, after all, are mainly for the old folks, their absence representing the instinct to keep alive the divine sparks of youth. A little one that no longer petitions good St. Nick is a sad spectacle; even sadder is the man or woman to whom his myth has lost its savor. To such when the sun goes down and the west fades—the heavens fill with no shining stars.

The period through which mankind has passed has been marked by a duel between those who hope and those who despair—between those who believe in Santa Claus and those who do not. Let us rejoice that the quivering balance is now definitely inclining to the better side. Being young, be forever young—never has the old text been more vindicated than in these days.

Unlogged with prudence and limping with no rheumatism, youth, shouting to laggards, "Would you live forever?" plunged forward through four terrible years, furnishing new reasons for respecting humanity. Then came the serene and yellow leaf of the stay-at-homes. They sought to turn off the fountains of faith. But, happily, their grip is loosening and the sweet waters flow again. Whether your youngster hangs up stockings or not, don't yourself, Mr. and Mrs. Grown-up, lose your own credulity.
