Nearly all of the towns of the Willamette valley have served notice on their water consumers to slow up on their wasteful use of water for irrigating and sprinkling purpose, owing to the inability of their pumps to supply their demands. Here in Oregon City when a hot day comes and everybody is using all the water they can and the pressure begins to run a little low, the regulator on the big city pump opens out and water enough is forced through the mains to supply the ordinary uses of a city of twice the size of this place, and all can use water to their hearts content with no fear of its being cut off or reduced.

Incubator for sale
