The Corinth Canal.

That great engineering work, the Corone which our court was not inth canal, which will sever the Peloponnesus from the mainland of Greece, and will permit the largest ships to pass directly from the Gulf of Athens to the Gulf of Corinth, is said to be rapidly approaching completion. The canal will have no locks, but is level from end to end and perfectly straight, the width being ninety-six feet and the depth thirtysix. At the Corinth end it is crossed by a railroad bridge 164 feet high, under which the tallest ships may pass without lowering their topmasts. With the exception of a short space in the center, the channel, it is stated, has been excavated down to the sea level, and water has been admitted for some distance at the Corinth end, as also at the other approach. It is assumed that about 300 vessels from Trieste and Finme, and about the same number from Italian ports, will pass through the canal annually, while it is calculated that between 700 and 800 Greek ships will use
