SISTER MARTHA.

By AUGUSTA LARNED.

The card was written and lay before her; in the left hand lower corner, "Tea at six o'clock;" in the opposite corner, "R. S. V. P." Mrs. Whitcomb did not know rightly what those magic letters stood for, but she had seen them on fashionable invitations and she was determined to have the very latest "wrinkle" at her tea party. Slowly she addressed the envelope, "Captain George Bligh." There were other Blighs in Littlefield, and she meant there should be no mistake. She sat and nibbled the end of her pen, conjuring up pleasant images of the discomfiture of the people who would find themselves left out in the cold. The Woods, who lived over the way, and the Tuckers, who lived next door, neither of these families were on the list; neither of them had ever offered her the hospitality of so much as a family tea or a picked up dinner.

Ann's mouth pursed and her look stiffened into a strong aspect of disapproval. "I've lived in my old double gowns and wrappers so long," she went on, faltering, and yet with the pathetic eagerness in her eyes, "I haven't anything to appear in. But there are the dresses I had before mother died all laid away in the press. I wish you would bring some of them out. Ann, and let me look at them." Ann saw the fluttering, feeble hands and the excited look in the glassy, sunken eyes. She moved toward the press with reluctance, as if her joints had suddenly grown stiff, but she did move, and presently came back with some antiquated gowns hung over her arm. There was a blue merino made for a hoop, faded in streaks and wrinkled, and a pink lawn with wide, old-fashioned sleeves and low neck to be worn with a lace cape. Miss Mayhew took the pink lawn in her trembling fingers and held it up beside her faded, fallow face and whitening hair, where she could see herself in the bureau glass. It was a ghastly reminder of her lost girlhood. An odor of dead summers and withered roses seemed to steal out of the old lawn. It touched the poor woman's memories and she let fall the pink folds from her pale fingers, feebly pushing the gown away with her foot as it lay on the carpet and broke into weak, hysterical sobs. The Many Remarkable cures of Catarrh effected by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla are conclusive proofs that this loathsome and dangerous disease is one of the blood, needing only this searching and powerful alterative to thoroughly eradicate it. I have suffered for years from catarrh, which was so severe that it destroyed my appetite and weakened my system. None of the remedies I took afforded me any relief, until I used Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I began to take this medicine last spring, and am now entirely free from that disgusting disease. My appetite has returned, and I am once more strong and healthy. - Susan L. W. Cook, 909 Albany street, Boston Highlands, Boston, Mass. My son - now fifteen years of age - was troubled for a long time with catarrh, in its worst form, through the effects of which his blood became poisoned. About a year ago he began using Ayer's Sarsaparilla, has taken seven bottles of it, and is now entirely well. - D. P. Kerr, Big Spring, Ohio. I was cured of a long-standing catarrh by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. - James J. Doughter, Company G., 13th Infantry, Fort Wingate, N. M. Ayer's Sarsaparilla PREPARED BY Dr. J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass. Sold by Druggists, 50c. per bottle. Worth 25c. a bottle.
