FALLS IMPROVEMENT

A Ten Thousand Horse Power to be Erected.

DAM TO BE FINISHED THIS YEAR

The Work of Preparing for Immense Developments of the Water Power now in Progress.

Ever since the announcement that the Edison and Thomson-Houston electric companies had acquired a large interest in the Oregon City water power and adjacent real estate in the newly organized General Electric company, the work of preparing for the development of the property has been going ahead. There has not been much boom in the matter, but good work is being done nevertheless.

The clearing of the timber from the several hundred acres of land owned by the company was the first indication of renewed activity. Then the construction of the drift wing was begun, the walls of the "basin" made higher and finally the building of a dam to preserve an even brink to the fall and increase the possible power was put in progress. The drift wing, originally intended to be but 600 feet long, has been extended to 1000 feet and it now well along toward completion. This structure consists of bent work, the top of it is sixteen feet above low water, it is well anchored to the solid rock bottom and it is so nearly parallel with the course of the river current that it is deemed entirely beyond possibility of damage by flood. There is sufficient space between the shore end of the drift wing and the bank to permit the passage of boats. The shore line will keep drift wood from entering the "basin" at that opening. The wing will carry any drift out to the very brink of the fall and insure its going over the precipice instead of being sucked around into the "basin." The extension of the "basin" wall is also intended to lessen the suction by preventing the overflow that has been usual during the high water season.

Then the dam to preserve the evenness of the brink of the falls was undertaken. It was hardly expected that this work could be finished during this low water season, but it is now so far advanced that it is sure to be completed this year. The last section of the coffer dam was put in last Tuesday and that insured the finishing of the dam this season. This dam will amount to adding an average of about one foot to the height of the falls, and will result in a considerable increase in the volume of the river may be turned to the water wheels if necessary.

This dam is of crib work. It varies in height from two or three feet to sixteen; the irregularities of the rock being responsible for the varying heights of different parts of the dam. It is so constructed that the weight of the water will serve to keep it down to the rocks so there will not be a great tendency to break away from the fastenings.

The plans have been prepared for a large power house to be constructed on the west bank of the river on the west side of the canal. The new building will be next to the bluff. The dimensions are 315x45 feet and it will be fitted with machinery for generating 10,000 horse power. This will render necessary the widening of the canal by eighty feet for about 1300 feet of its length. The waste way for the water giving the power will be between the upper and lower mills of the Willamette Pulp & Paper company. It is not yet determined whether work on this immense power house will be begun this year or not. The rainy weather is so near at hand that it is likely this work will be put over till next season and then rushed through to completion. Still the company is eager to get the thing in shape for the extensive development work it has in view and it may begin the power house this fall and push construction through the winter even though it will considerably increase the cost of the concern. Between 300 and 400 men will be required on this improvement.

Engineer Sullivan is kept busy in arranging and directing the plans and improvement work. Every officer of the company is anxious to get the work planned completed so that the big scheme of development may be carried forward. President Morey is thoroughly alive to the possibilities of the case and he is pushing with all his indomitable energy toward the goal. It will take a little time to put in operation all the forces which will be centered here but the matter is in competent hands and it promises to bring Oregon City the prominence and prosperity to which its natural advantages entitle it.
