WINTER BUTTER.

Taking Care of the Cows That Give Milk to Make It.

Which is better, to take your milk to a creamery whose butter sells for thirty cents per pound and above, or to manufacture it at home and get twenty-five cents therefor? If you think best to make the butter at home, why not adopt the creamery plan and get the creamery price?

Listen attentively to all that you hear in the institutes this winter in regard to dairying. If you wish to reject any of the sentiments as impractical, that is your privilege, but the bulk of the institute talk is golden grain that you cannot afford to throw away.

Ordinary cows do not yield butter in winter that has a natural golden hue deep enough to satisfy the buyer's eye, so it is expedient that a little commercial color be added to the cream.

The amount of work entailed through the winter care of cows depends on how you begin in the fall. If you do not make a thorough preparation, and then carry out an organized plan, you will find the care of cows very laborious and the result unsatisfactory.

Have the stable warm, keep the cows bedded from the start and clean the droppings from the stable at least once a day, and you have reduced the time to be afterward spent in keeping the animals clean and comfortable to a minimum. There is always less real work about taking care of milk animals properly than there is in the neglectful, slovenly way, where a general digging out becomes imperative after a length of time.

During this open winter weather do not commit the mistake of turning your meadows into a barnyard for the cattle. Thousands of dairymen in the past have been making just such grave mistakes, and what is worse, they are still continuing in the error. The grass crop of 1922 will suffer thereby, and the winter milk flow of this present season will be curtailed by the bad practice. Then why continue a custom so replete with damage to the dairy interests?

If you use a thermometer in the house to gauge the temperature of the living room by, why not hang one in the cow stable and give it a casual glance now and then? The little quicksilver tube would give you some telling points on the comfortable or uncomfortable condition of the stable.

The dairyman who derives the least benefit from his straw is the one who stacks it out in the barnyard and allows the cows to run to it all winter. It would do them far more good as dry, warm bedding in a tight stable than as browned straw on a cold, windy day. A cutting machine will put straw in a condition to be mixed with chopped clover hay, or with bran or meal, and form a valuable diet for cows.

Don't drive the cows out two or three times a day to drink ice cold water. They need the water, but its freezing temperature and their exposure to winter blasts are contrary to their comfort and profit. This applies with great force to cows that are in milk at this period of the year. If you seek profit from winter dairying, give your cows all of the water that they will drink at a temperature as far above freezing, but below 70 degs., as you can secure. Water that can be made to run into the warm stable answers the purpose admirably. This generally can be done with less expense and trouble than by artificial heating.

Don't trust an inexperienced hand to take care of your dairy because it is winter and you can get his help by giving him his board. It wouldn't be any wonder if it would be the most costly board bill in the end that you ever paid.—George E. Newell in American Cultivator.

Dairy and Creamery.

About this time of year the humped up milk cow is to be seen shivering against the south side of a straw stack with the icicles hanging to her coat. Her owner ought to be forced to take that course of treatment for his health awhile.

If you have some money left over this winter after paying all your debts, don't put it out on interest till you look around and see whether you have a good barn and good warm quarters for your live stock, not even excepting the colts and dry cattle.

The English language is ransacked to find sweet scented, sweet sounding names for just plain, coarse, common oleomargarine.

A man who investigated it says that a cream separator will get half a pound more butter to the hundred pounds of milk than the best method of cream raising will do.

Once in a great while there comes a cow that cannot by any known means be dried off from giving milk. Ordinarily, however, the most persistent milker can be dried up by leaving a little of the milk in her udder at each milking. The philosophy of it is that so long as there is milk in the udder the glands that secrete the fluid will not be excited to produce more. Giving the cow dry feed also tends to lessen the milk flow.

The Holstein-Friesian association of America reports that it is not possible to get a sufficient number of cows of that breed to take the tests at the World's fair next year. The cows are to be kept at the exposition grounds six months, and owners who value their stock at high prices will not take the risks of leaving the animals at the show grounds. The association will, however, offer valuable additional premiums for Holstein-Friesians exhibited in the live stock department of the fair. But the favorite Holsteins will undoubtedly lose ground in America by this failure to show.

A WEALTHY BAREFOOT BOY.

A Physician's Son Who Goes Stockingless Summer and Winter.

The indignation of the passengers on a western Maryland railroad train was somewhat unnecessarily excited near Baltimore by the unusual spectacle of a richly clad boy of five or six years, whose legs and feet were perfectly bare, although the winter morning was a cold one. The child was accompanied by his mother and sister, both of whom were richly dressed, and the sudden conclusion was formed by the passengers that the family had spent so much money in wraps, dresses and coverings for the bodies and shoulders of the elders that nothing had been left wherewith to provide a protection from the inclemency of the weather for the boy's extremities.

The appearance and conduct of the three, which indicated culture, wealth and, on the part of the mother, parental solicitude for the welfare of her offspring, and on the part of the boy perfect content and comfort and apparent obliviousness to the fact that his feet and ankles were bare, hardly seemed to accord with the hastily formed suspicion of the curious spectators. On inquiry it was ascertained that the boy was the son of a prominent physician who had lost one child after another with throat diseases until he hit upon the idea of turning his children out barefooted, as children went before stockings and shoes, which retain the moisture of the foot and the moisture of the ground, were invented.

The physician's experiment proved to be a perfect success. The barefooted boy was the picture of health. At Union station he ran up the cold boards and ice covered bricks laughing and singing and totally unaware of any discomfort. By adopting the barefoot method the Maryland physician has succeeded in raising a family of healthy boys and girls. Winter and summer his children of both sexes have gone shoeless and stockingless. People look on with curiosity and amazement, but the doctor is perfectly satisfied with the results.

Indian mothers made their babies hardy by plunging them in the ice covered streams. Physicians of today say that the best remedy for cold feet is to plunge them into cold water. The warmth, comfort and exhilaration which come from the attraction of the blood to the extremities exceed any physical delight to be extracted from toasting one's toes at the open fire, the register or the steam radiator. It seems to be Mother Nature's way of teaching us that we must endure before we enjoy and that the greatest joy comes through endurance.—Baltimore American.

Smoking Not So Dangerous After All.

The coroner of St. Louis has "knocked out" one superstition of the doctors and explains himself thus:

"I think I have knocked one superstition completely out. This is the belief that invertebrate smoking causes heart disease. Out of a total of 460 deaths due to heart trouble that have come under my observation during the last two years, only two of the victims were regular smokers. Drink caused the largest portion of those diseases, and so the deaths. Fifteen years ago, when I was back in the oil regions of Pennsylvania, a doctor told me that I would be a dead man within two years unless I quit smoking. My heart was affected, he said, and the tobacco, by increasing the organ's movement, aggravated the malady.

Six years ago that same physician passed through this city on the way to Colorado for his health. He was almost a complete wreck, and his heart was in a very bad state. I happened to meet him, and almost the first thing he said was, "You quit smoking long ago, I suppose." "Well, scarcely," I replied. "I smoke now on an average twenty-five cigars a day and never felt better in my life." You never saw such an astonished man in your life. To make a long story short, I got that man to smoke a cigar, and before the morning was over he had smoked five. Tobacco put him on the up road to health again, and he is living yet.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Rolling an Empty Barrel.

One of the interesting spectacles of the streets adjacent to the great markets of this town is the feats of barrel rolling performed by predatory boys, mostly Italians. It may seem an easy thing to roll a barrel along a crowded sidewalk, without doing aught that shall bring down the disapproval of the police, but it isn't. The Italian gleamer tips his barrel, open end up, at an angle of thirty degrees or less, and whirles it along by deft touches with one hand at the inner edge of the rim. A barrel thus treated by a clever lad can be sent along for blocks with only an occasional touch from the other hand. Even at curbs and crossings the skillful roller keeps his barrel going with one hand. There is never a collision with the ordinarily careful pedestrian, and the line of advance, when the pavement is clear, is straight as the crow flies.—New York Sun.

The Blue Color of the Sky.

The blue color of the sky is probably merely the color of the air seen through a length of about forty-five miles. It has been observed by those who have ascended about five miles above the earth's surface that the sky appears of a dark, inky hue, owing to the very small reflection and dispersion of the light, while the blue color no longer appears above, but below them. Similarly the blue color of distant hills is owing to the same cause. Del Meer believed that were it possible for a man to ascend to a height of ten miles he would find himself in total darkness, even though it were bright noonday on the earth below him.—St. Louis Republic.

Pitiful Paragraphs.

Nothing in the newspapers is more pitiful than the constantly recurring paragraphs which contain the last letters of a suicide. The pathos of them is not obscured by the absurd inadequacy of the reasons which they only too often advance for self destruction.—Boston Globe.

HORNLESS BEEF COWS.

Three Fine Specimens of the Best Known Polled Breeds.

We have the pleasure of presenting this week typical specimens of the three best known breeds of hornless cattle. The pictures show three cows in their prime of life and in prime condition—two black, one red; two Scotch, one English in ancestry.

FIG. 1—ABERDEEN ANGUS COW.

The first is an Aberdeen Angus, representing one family of the famous Scotch black cattle. She is American born and bred—a western beauty. The word "beef" is written unmistakably over her. Cows of this breed sometimes reach a ton in weight.

Fig. 2 shows a magnificent cow of that other black Scotch family, the Galloway. In this illustration the characteristic curly long hair of the Galloway's coat is especially noticeable. Now that the buffalo is extinct, Americans in the northwest will have to make their sleigh robes and overcoats of Galloway hides. Already in Manitoba the Galloway hide is an article of value for such purposes.

In Fig. 3 is shown the only one of the breeds that lays claim to producing dairy cattle. This cow belongs to the English Norfolk red polled family. The red polfs have a record in their native Norfolk of being fairly good dairy cattle. In disposition and build they resemble the Devons, are quiet and peaceable in disposition, and deep red in color. Of course in exceptional instances cows of all these breeds have been known as good milkers, but except the red polfs their record is for meatmaking. All three breeds are now tolerably well known and spread through America. Which is the best beef breed? Examine their points for yourself and make up your own mind.

Feeding the Bees.

The greatest loss among the bees during the winter time is caused by diarrhea, and when this trouble is eliminated one finds that the bees keep pretty well. This bee complaint is directly traceable to the food and to the confinement of the bees in winter quarters where they have no chance to void their intestines. If a few bright, warm days come in midwinter the bees have a chance to move around a little, but the colder the weather is the more they have to huddle into close quarters to keep warm. It is also true that the colder the weather is the more the bees have to eat to keep up the animal heat. These two causes operating together often make the loss of bees quite important during extremely hard and severe weather.

The food in the winter time then is the all important question. Superior even to natural honey for food is pure cane sugar, which will cause dysentery less than any other article that can be fed. It is said by expert culturists that when this is the exclusive diet of the bees they never die of dysentery. If natural honey or any of the other foods is fed it should be given to the bees during the warm spells in the winter, when the bees have a chance to move around. The bees sometimes eat the bee bread itself or grains of pollen floating in the honey, and it is this coarse part of the food which overloads the intestines and causes dysentery. A great many apiarists will have a surplus stock of honey which has failed to find a good market, and they hate to keep this and buy sugar for bee food. Yet if it is going to cause death among the bees one ought not to hesitate long.

In feeding the bees in winter a great deal depends upon the weather and the locality. Several of our past winters have been so mild and open that honey could be fed right along, and no danger be run of causing dysentery in the hive. In the warmer states, where the bees can fly around most of the winter, the same holds true, but in a severe winter, in a cold northern state, the odds will be largely in favor of the pure cane sugar as a food. The price of sugar is now so low that it is the cheapest food to give the bees.—Helen Wharburton in American Cultivator.

A Suggestion.

We would suggest to John Bull, whose cattle are said to be suffering from pleuropneumonia, that he get on his bicycle and take a trip to this country and call on Jerry Rusk for information as to the best means of stamping out the disease. Uncle Jerry would no doubt be pleased to give him all the data and recipes he needs.—Field and Farm.

RHEUMATISM CONQUERED.

CURES THAT CAN BE SUBSTANTIATED BY YOUR NEIGHBORS.

Popham's Seaweed Compound is creating quite a furor wherever it is introduced, in cases that have defied the skill of physicians. It has been easily and quickly cured by this medicine. The following recent cases show its merits:

January 30, 1922.

This is to certify that I had rheumatism in my back and right leg for seven months. For weeks at a time I could not raise myself on my chair nor walk. I was treated by a number of physicians without any benefit; in fact they left my leg from the knee to the foot paralyzed. I bought two bottles of Popham's Seaweed Compound, which cured me in eight days so that I could walk twelve miles with ease. I can safely recommend Dr. Popham's remedy to all sufferers from rheumatism. Yours truly,

GABRIEL LOWERY, Bucoda, Wash.

Jan. 12th, 1922.—I was laid up with rheumatism and suffered terribly for five weeks. Two doctors were called in who discussed my case. I was painted with iodine until the skin came off three times, and I used four bottles of liniment without getting a cure. Mr. Hargreaves introduced to me Popham's Seaweed Compound, three applications of which cured me so that I can walk as well as ever. It is worth its weight in gold for rheumatism and I can strongly recommend it.

Mrs. GEO. REDDAWAY, Oregon City.

The above medicine is introduced by the Australian Seaweed Medicine Co. Agent for Clatskanie, South Madison street, Oregon City.
