HIS WORK IS DONE
Judge Deady Passes to the Beyond Ripe in Years and Deeds.
PORTLAND MURDER AND SUICIDE.
Chas. H. Gove Shoots C. J. Smith, Then Himself—Both are Dead.

PORTLAND, Or., March 26.—Hon. Matthew P. Deady, judge of the United States district court, is dead. His death occurred at 7:45 o'clock yesterday morning at his rooms in The Hill. He was one of Oregon's pioneers, and was one of the prominent men of the Pacific coast.

Judge Deady had been in poor health and gradually failing for more than two years, but had been able to attend to business till within a short time. He sat in the United States district court for the last time on March 9. He was taken sick first in the fall of 1889, when he was confined to his bed for over a month. It seemed to be a general breaking down physically, and he gradually failed from that time.

Judge Deady would have been seventy years of age and entitled to retire on full pay on the 12th of May, 1894. His friends, fearing that he might become physically incapable of attending to business before that time, secured the passage of an act by Congress allowing him to retire at any time after March 4, 1893. He had not made up his mind to retire, and continued to hold court when able. The appointment of Judge Gilbert relieved him of a large amount of work, and Judge Gilbert has also assisted him, when he was unable to get down to the courthouse, by attending to business for him. He thus had much more leisure than usual of late, and spent much time in reading, and enjoyed many pleasant days in his comfortable chambers. He also derived much pleasure from the visits of friends, who made it a point to call at his chambers for a short visit almost daily. On returning home from holding court on the 9th inst., he was taken seriously ill, and although several times improving so that his friends imagined that he would be able to get out again, he continued to fail, and on Tuesday it became evident that the end was approaching.

His Life and Service.
 In the course of its able review of this eminent jurist's life the Oregonian says: "It would hardly be possible to name who has had so prominent a part in the making of Oregon as Matthew P. Deady. To the observer of our historic growth his hand has been apparent in the gradual rise of the whole framework of this structure that we call the state. No other man has so impressed himself upon its constitution, its legislation, its jurisprudence; no other single hand or mind has been so constructive in that domain of institutional law and custom in which a state roots its organic life.

His residence in Oregon covered the space of forty-three and one-half years. The territorial government had gone into operation a few months before his arrival. The next year (1850) he was elected to the house of representatives of the territory from Yamhill county, and afterwards to the territorial council, of which he became president. In March, 1853, he was made one of the United States judges for the territory, and as his district was Southern Oregon he lived in the Umpqua valley a number of years. Elected to the convention called to frame a constitution for the state in 1857, he became president of that body, and had a very large share in framing the fundamental law which has served us without change to this day. Early in 1859, upon the admission of the state, he was appointed United States district judge. The codes of Oregon, nearly in their still existing forms, were written mainly by him, and his opinions, delivered from the bench, covering an endless variety of topics, and elaborated with great care, are very voluminous. He wrote, besides, during many years, very largely for newspapers, magazines and reviews, and published many lectures on various topics.

Shooting at Portland.
 PORTLAND, Or., March 26.—Charles H. Gove, real estate agent, shot and seriously wounded Conrad J. Smith, bookkeeper, last evening, and then sent a bullet crashing through his own brain. The tragedy occurred about 6:40 o'clock, at the intersection of Third and Alder streets. Four shots were fired, Smith was hurried to Surgeon Young's office, where his single wound in the body was examined and pronounced not necessarily fatal, and Gove's remains to the morgue.

From the statements of eye-witnesses of the shooting, and they are usually conflicting in detail, it appears that Gove and Smith had walked together to the northeast corner of Third and Alder streets. In front of the Model restaurant they stopped and held a brief conversation, and then Gove was seen to suddenly thrust his right hand behind him, underneath his coat. As he did so, Smith started to run across Third street, and he had just reached the car track when Gove, who was slowly following him, began firing. Three shots were aimed at the fleeing man, but the only third one took effect. It struck him in the back below the right shoulder, and the shock staggered him. Evidently believing that he had carried out his intention to kill, Gove placed the muzzle of the weapon in his right ear, pulled the trigger and fell in a heap. Death must have been instantaneous for when picked up a few seconds later the unfortunate man was lifeless.

Charles H. Gove was a real estate agent, with an office at 132 1/2 First street, corner of Alder. He was married to his widow, whose maiden name was Alice Clausen, about ten years ago. She was then a school teacher, and up to last June had been employed in the public schools of this city.

All the evidences go to show that the tragedy of Saturday was the act of an insane man, whose victim and widow are objects of sympathy rather than of reprobation. Further evidence may give the case another aspect, but this seems the common-sense view of it at present.

PORTLAND, Or., March 27.—Charles H. Gove's aim was too true. His intention to kill the man he imagined had wronged him and then commit suicide has been carried out. His body is now lying at his late home prepared for the interment that will take place this morning. Smith lingered until 2:10 this morning, and was only kept alive that long by the administration of powerful stimulants.

When Smith was shot Saturday evening, Dr. Young, the surgeon who attended him, expressed a hope of his patient's recovery. The ball which entered his back passed clear through the body but it was thought possible that no vital organ was touched and in this event there was a good chance for recovery. Yesterday morning he was in good spirits and his condition was very hopeful. He complained frequently of a pain in the abdominal region, but no importance was attached to this. However, at about 5 o'clock he went into a state of collapse. The attendants summoned Dr. Young, who at once saw that Smith was dying. He began administering injections of strychnine, and in this way the patient was kept alive. Dr. Young expressed an opinion that the stomach had been penetrated and this was the direct cause of the fatal result.

The attendants would not permit Smith to converse before he became unconscious, and no statement further than that made on the evening of the shooting could be obtained.

They Admitted Chinese.
 PORTLAND, March 22.—Acting Collector of Customs L. A. Pike of Portland has suspended deputies Cardinell and Armstrong for disobeying orders in landing Chinese. Of this matter Mr. Pike says: Several days ago Mr. Lotan, collector of the port, left for San Francisco. Before he went away I had a talk with him about the landing of Chinese. I said to him that the Haytian Republic was soon to come in, and that she had a lot of Chinamen aboard, who, I supposed, carried certificates. Yet I did not like the idea of passing upon these certificates, but preferred, if landed at all, the Chinese should pass through the courts. "Mr. Lotan concurred with me, and said I should see that such a course was followed. After he went away and before the Haytian Republic arrived, I called Deputy Collector Cardinell into my office and instructed him not to recognize any of the certificates that might be presented, but to let the Chinamen be subject to habeas corpus proceedings.

"After listening to what I had to say, Mr. Cardinell said his instructions had always been to land the Chinese whenever they present proper certificates, and that he would do so in this case. Yet when I left him, I had no idea that he would utterly disregard what I had said.

"The Haytian Republic arrived last Thursday evening at 6 o'clock, and an hour later the master secured his entry papers. Inspector Armstrong was on duty with Deputy Cardinell, and at 10 o'clock Saturday night the Chinamen were landed and immediately scattered."

"When I came down to the office the following morning, Mr. Cardinell reported what he had done. The certificates appeared to have been all right, but as Mr. Cardinell has disobeyed my instructions I promptly suspended him and Inspector Armstrong. It was my duty to suspend them."

This case will be thoroughly looked into by the government.

Fourth Class Postmasters.
 WASHINGTON, March 28.—Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General Maxwell today indicated the line of policy which will govern him in his selection of about 50,000 fourth-class postmasters this year. He said:

"In the first place I don't propose to permit unsuccessful politicians to dictate appointments. Ex-congressmen and men who ran for congress and were defeated will not control appointments under me. In the state where there is not a democratic senator and the districts are represented by republicans in congress, the state, district or county democratic committees will be asked to make recommendations for postmasters. We want to deal with live democrats, men of influence, and not worn-out politicians. Men and women who held postoffices four years ago will not be appointed if new blood can be found. The "No ex" rule will apply for the selection of fourth-class postmasters. Of course, if we cannot get democrats who have not held office to accept them, we will reinstate old postmasters rather than appoint republicans to hold offices. We are now ready for business and the changes will be made as rapidly as possible."

Farmer Burnt To Death.
 DAYTON, Or., March 27.—George Gibbons, a farmer well-known and highly respected, living about three miles northwest of this place, was burned to death in his residence last night. With his brother Daniel he had been butchering some distance from his residence. Returning, he noticed, when some distance from his home, that the house was in flames. Thinking that his family was in the building he entered through the front door. As the door opened the flames burst out and he apparently fell. His brother burst in a window thinking that something could be done to rescue him, but the heat was so intense that he was badly burned and could do nothing. Of the brave, honest, true-hearted man that entered his doomed house bent on saving his loved ones, nothing remained but the charred and blackened trunk, which was recovered about midnight. The family had left the house early in the evening and was at the residence of the father of the deceased near by.

The Last General.
 SEAWANEE, Tenn., March 28.—General E. Kirby Smith, professor of mathematics in the University of the South since the war, died here this afternoon. For two years his health had been declining. Two weeks ago he was taken worse in New Orleans and congestion of the lungs, which followed, carried him off. Once or twice during temporary periods of semi-consciousness of the past two days, his mind wandered through the past scenes and he ordered batteries to come up. General Smith was born at St. Augustine, Fla., March 16, 1825. With him closes the list of full generals on both sides during the late war. He came from an illustrious family of soldiers that participated with distinction in every war waged in this country since the old French war.

Seeking Office.
 WASHINGTON, March 27.—John Myers, of Portland, arrived in Washington today. He is a candidate for his old place as marshal of Oregon. He thinks that as he only served two years, his having been an ex-officer-holder will make no difference. Editor Flagg, of Salem, who wants to be register of the Oregon City land office, is also in Washington.

There are 11 democratic patriots from Oregon in Washington now, either seeking office for themselves or for their friends, but mostly for themselves.

A Famous Race Horse Stolen.
 LONDON, March 28.—A great sensation has been caused in sporting circles by the inexplicable disappearance of the racer and winner of the Waterloo cup, Fullerton. The horse was taken from the stable of Colonel North at Eltham Saturday.
