A little practice and skill in putting up fruit and vegetables often help sales and profits. For example, an Ohio correspondent of The American Agriculturist tells of a gardener who received a beetles, and before he could do anything they had eaten the tops off a fine lot of half grown early beets. The roots were from one inch to two and a half inches in diameter. The gardener cut the tops off and packed the roots in quart berry boxes, which sold quickly at a nickel per box. 30 cents, the bushel value of which was not more than 16 cents. Finally he had 22 quarts of good blackberries, which were worth at the dealer's 9 cents per quart. He sold 12 quarts at 13 cents per quart, and closed out the other 10 quarts to one buyer at 11 cents per quart. The stuff sold at retail amounted to $7.71.

At wholesale it would have brought $5.02.

At half past 11 o'clock sales began to drag, everything being sold but one dozen of sweet corn and 18 cabbages. These were sold to a grocer at 6 cents for the corn and 2 cents each for the cabbages, making the total of the load amount to $8.18. The man left home after 7 a. m and came back a little before 2 p. m, the end of his route being just exactly eight miles from home. In this instance the gardener made $2.60 by peddling the load, or more than a first class mechanic's wages for the entire day. All days are not alike, however, and $1 may be considered a fair equivalent for three or four hours' work in selling a $5 or $6 load. As a rule, one cannot do much profitable peddling on Monday, but Saturday makes up for it, as one can peddle all day, and the first fruits of any crop will be in demand and bring extra prices on Saturday.
