

FARM KETTLE.

Set It With a Good Brick Foundation and Cover It.

One of the necessities upon a farm is a set kettle for boiling food for hogs, hens and other stock.

FARM KETTLE.

Use out of doors. Such a kettle should be protected from the weather, for if it is not the kettle is soon rusted, and the bricks become loosened by the entrance of water from the top.

Preparing Poultry For Market.

Poultry—Poultry should be kept from food 24 hours before killing.

Chickens—Kill by bleeding in the roof of the mouth or veins of the neck; leave head and feet on; do not draw crop or intestines.

Turkeys—Observe the same rule about feeding and killing as chickens, but dry pick while the turkey is bleeding.

Ducks and Geese—Observe the same directions as given in the scalding of chickens, leaving them in the water longer, however, to loosen the feathers.

Directions For Packing—Pack in boxes or barrels lined with clean paper. Keep the body and legs straightened out, as it adds to the appearance when opened for sale.

Dehorn. Last winter my brother and I dehorned our cattle for feeding and for shipping off pasture.

THE FARMER'S TROTTER IN WINTER.

Give Him a Box Stall and a Yard to Exercise In.

The methods and ideas of wintering campaigners have changed materially in these latter days. The best trainers no longer believe that a winter of idleness is the best preparation for a successful summer campaign.

The idea of starving or freezing out horses has long been exploded with me and must have originated with some one who was so confoundedly mean that he gruded the horses the grain necessary for them to retain their stamina.

Adjoining this box let there be a yard well littered with straw, and every day that is not too stormy give him the run of the yard for several hours.

Have a large manger in which the horse can turn this hay over, selecting the part of it that suits him best; but if good and properly cured all will be eaten.

Give him at intervals three feeds a day of good oats, every other day substituting a few ears of sound old corn. The dent varieties are the best.

Once or twice a week give a bran mash and place a box containing salt within reach. Through the winter change the feed by giving cut feed, carrots, wheat, rye, barley, meal, etc., and as the spring comes on a little oilmeal, flax or sunflower seeds will assist in shedding the old coat and producing a soft, shiny new one to take its place.

He should be watered three times a day, the litter in the box shaken up and all the soiled portions thrown out once a day.

Directions For Packing—Pack in boxes or barrels lined with clean paper. Keep the body and legs straightened out, as it adds to the appearance when opened for sale.

For a country place or farm there is nothing that adds more of a home look than good outbuildings, and we would have the horse barn not too far distant from the house—in fact, we would have it so near that, let the weather be as rough as it might, there would be no dread of going from one to the other.

Not naturally protected, we would shelter it with belts of trees, evergreen and deciduous. To sum up, we would have it look as if its inmates were just as well taken care of as those in the more pretentious dwelling, and where horses, like the falcon, would have their eye for the beautiful gratified whenever they looked out of the box window.

A metropolitan journal tells a remarkable story of a young hen that was set on ducks. When the ducklings were hatched, they took naturally to swimming in the brook, and the hen watched them from the shore.

To get the best results from straw and fodder as feed, they should be run through a cutter, then steamed or moistened and mixed with grain or roots.

Take the papers yourself and see what the animals you want to sell are bringing in the city markets. Don't be a chump and let every rascally dealer pluck you.

M. Hammerly, a well-known business man of Hillsboro, Va., sends this testimony in the merits of Ayer's Sarsaparilla: 'Several years ago, I hurt my leg, the injury leaving a sore which has not healed.'
