

Warm Spring Indians in Trouble.

It having been reported that the Warm Spring Indians were catching salmon on the Upper Clackamas, Fish Warden McGuire had warrants sworn out for their arrest and Monday three of them were brought in by Deputy Sheriff Hyatt, assisted by J. U. Campbell, S. J. Vaughn and S. H. Hingate. It was expected that about twenty Indians would be brought in but the main body had heard of the coming of the officers and fled over the mountains. Those brought in belonged to a small party that had left the fishing grounds and gone to the berry patch on Oak Ranch creek. On their arrival here they were brought before Justice Dixon for examination. Hon. Geo. C. Brownell was secured to appear in their behalf and the state was represented by Deputy District Attorney L. I. Porter. Owing to Mr. McGuire not being present the case was postponed until Tuesday morning. On being brought into court the Indians acknowledged catching salmon, claiming to not have known that it was unlawful at this season, and as Justice Dixon did not wish to put the county to any unnecessary expense—the Indians having no money to pay a fine—he ordered them to be released under suspension of sentence, the object being to give the Indians fair warning and if any of them are hereafter found fishing out of season to give them the full penalty of the law.

The Indians were greatly displeased to be not allowed to fish when and where they pleased. From time immemorial the Warm Spring and other Eastern Oregon Indians have crossed the mountains and many pitched battles have been fought with the Willamette valley Indians for the possession of the fishing grounds on the headwaters of the Clackamas and Sandy. They only fish in fall when the salmon are lean for they cannot keep them through hot weather and as the fish at this time of the year are just ready to spawn the destruction is very great, for the Indians utterly exterminating salmon on the spawning grounds by means of a ricker dams.

A Blackmailing Scheme.

County Judge Hayes was arrested last Friday on a warrant sworn out before a Portland justice charging him with an attempt, in company with Toll Thompson, an insurance adjuster, to coerce Mrs. J. E. Melcher, residing near Stalford, into accepting a less amount than her policy called for in payment for the insurance on her residence lately burned. The examination was set for Thursday of this week and will take place in Portland.

Among Judge Hayes's friends who have known him since his boyhood days the charge is considered a blackmailing scheme, for in his dealings both as a private citizen and as an attorney he has always conducted himself in an upright and honorable manner. This Mrs. Melcher does not bear the best of a reputation in her own neighborhood, and it is gravely hinted that something besides spitwork is at the back of her suit. As Judge Hayes was only employed as an attorney in the case by Thompson he will have little difficulty in clearing himself as he did nothing but what he would do for any other client. The Judge keenly feels the slur that has been cast upon his honor, not so much for the friends that know him as for the impression it will give among strangers. He left Thursday morning with Senator Brownell as his counsel for Portland to answer the charge.
