CONGRESS RESUMES

Legislators of the Country Assemble for the Short Session.

INCIDENTS OF THE OPENING.

President's Message—Some Recommendations Made—Important Questions Dodged.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3.—The opening of the second session of the 53d congress after a recess of three months made the capitol building the center of interest today, with added interest owing to the political revolution which recently occurred. In the senate the members were late in arriving, and some of those who had been most conspicuous in the public events, notably Senator Hill, were absent. The presentation and reading of the president's annual message constituted the chief point of interest in the senate. There were 70 senators present. After the reading of the message, resolutions were offered on various subjects, including the alleged Armenian outrages, the surrender of two Japanese citizens to the Chinese authorities and the election of United States senators by the people. The senate adjourned at 4 P. M.

SENATE'S ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3.—Promptly at 12 o'clock Vice-President Stevenson called the senate to order, and Chaplain Milburn offered the opening prayer. He referred feelingly to the critical illness through which the daughter of Stevenson had safely passed. Harris then offered the customary resolution asking that a committee be named for the notification of the president that the senate was in session. The presiding officer named Harris and Mansler as the committee. Cockrell, chairman of the committee on appropriations, next offered a resolution, which was adopted, providing that the daily sessions of the senate begin at 12 noon. The point of no quorum being raised the roll was called. It showed the presence of 68 senators, considerably more than a quorum. A recess was then taken until 12:30, to await the return of the committee sent to notify the president that the senate was in session. The committee not being ready to report at 12:30 a further recess was taken until 1:30. Upon reassembling at that hour Executive Clerk Pruden appeared at the main door, and white-haired Isaac Bassett announced:

"A message from the president."
Immediately Secretary Cox began reading the document. At 3:40 he finished having taken two hours and ten minutes. The vice-president then announced that, in accordance with the usual custom, the president's message would lay on the table and be printed. Routine business was then again taken up.

LITTLE DONE IN THE HOUSE.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3.—The opening of the short session of the house was picturesque in a way, but devoid of interesting features. The victorious republicans and defeated democrats exchanged greetings and gave and took thrusts on the result of the recent political battle with much animation, but through good nature. The galleries were crowded and half the desks on the floor were smothered with flowers. On ex-speaker Reed's desk was a magnificent floral ship. On the card attached to it was inscribed:

"Advocate, as you have always, protection and American labor, and the ship will guide you into a heaven of peaceful waters."

On the desk of Linton, of Michigan, was a large floral school house, the compliment of an A. P. A. organization in acknowledgment of his championship of the public schools.
Reed entered the chamber a little before noon and was enthusiastically cheered. His face wreathed in smiles, and he bowed right and left as he picked his way to the cloakroom, where friends congratulated him as next the speaker. A round of applause greeted Speaker Crisp as he entered. The other leaders on both sides were given enthusiastic receptions by their respective partisans. Wilson and Burrows were also particularly well received. There was no change in the first day's proceedings for reference to the elections, so the actual proceedings were dull and uninteresting. Several new members were sworn in, and, after a long wait, the president's message was read. Although it was listened to with interest, it was concluded without a mark of approval or disapproval.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3.—As the hands of the clock pointed to 12, Speaker Crisp entered the house chamber and ascended the rostrum amid applause. With several hard bangs of the gavel the speaker restored order, and the second session of the 53d congress began. Rev. Dr. Bagley, chaplain of the house, invoked a divine blessing, and then the roll was called. At 1:35 Mr. Purden, the president's executive clerk, appeared with the message, which was read by the clerk of the house. Mr. Karr. The time required was an hour and forty five minutes. It was listened to with careful attention, especially the portions relating to the tariff and banking scheme, but there was no demonstration when it was concluded. Several routine reports were presented, after which Scranton announced the death of P. Wright, the late representative from the 15th district of Pennsylvania. The usual resolutions were adopted, and then, as a further mark of respect, the house at 3:30 adjourned until tomorrow at 12 o'clock.

SYNOPSIS OF THE MESSAGE.

The president's message was one of the longest ever delivered in Congress, and covered a large number of subjects. On the foreign relations of the United States, he is gratified to report the most harmonious relations with all nations of the earth. Under this head he gave notice of the abrogation of the reciprocity treaty with the government of Brazil by the latter country and says nothing as to future trade relations with that country. Announces a new treaty with China for the further regulation of Chinese immigration. Of his efforts to bring about arbitration between China and Japan to settle their difficulties he trusts that it may be successful as the present war is injuring our growing commercial interest with the two countries.

In view of their wonderful strides in civilization, he recommends that Japan be treated on an equality of other nations. Of Germany's embargo against American cattle, he hopes that that government will see their error and cease their restriction. On Germany's threat of retaliation against our duty on sugar imported from other countries giving a bounty, recommends that the duty be rescinded. Of the complications in Central and South America with various European countries declares in maintaining the principles of the Monroe doctrine by the United States in protecting American interests. Recommends that the United States withdraw from the joint protectorate with England and Germany over the Samoan islands as American interests in the islands are not sufficient to justify the expense. Of our relations with the Hawaiian islands he makes no mention, merely stating that he had reorganized the republic lately founded.

In his review of the work of the various departments the president confines himself to reproducing extracts from the reports of cabinet officers. He recommends that the army be concentrated and that the smaller posts be abandoned and commends the efficacy of the army and its work in the late strike. For the department of justice he recommends that an additional judge be appointed for each circuit. He asks that the navy be increased by more battleships and torpedo boats; that more rapid promotions be given naval officers and that the coast survey be transferred from the treasury to the navy department. That a surplus supply of ordinance be manufactured suitable to arm our fast merchant ships with in case of emergency. In view of the fact that the postoffice department has been running at a loss he recommends that the rate on much of the matter now sent as second-class be raised. In addition to increasing the revenue it would rectify an injustice now perpetrated in allowing novels and trashy advertising matter gotten up as alleged newspapers and sent at newspaper rates.

In the work of the interior department he recommends that the price on timber land be raised; that the public lands be surveyed by government surveyors under the direct control of the department instead of by contract as now; that a court of appeal be established to decide all land contests and that registers and receivers be given authority to compel witnesses to attend in cases before them; that agents on the Indian reservations be exclusively army officers and the allotments in severalty to the Indians be held back until they are sufficiently civilized to take care of themselves. On pensions he makes no recommendations. In the agricultural department he is opposed to the indiscriminate distribution of seeds. He advocates some changes in the present tariff law and sanctions Carlisle's plan of banking and of currency. This banking plan being a cross between the present national banking system and that of the old state banks.

Mulino Musties.

MULINO, Dec. 4.—I presume as the reader glances at the heading of this column, he or she may wonder if the Mulino correspondent has been devoured by the hard times. Some may say that the times are beginning to pick up a little but we find them quite close in this section of the country. Nevertheless we are blessed with an abundance of estates and what a glorious country we would have, had we just a little more money or some such circulating medium to take the place of money, that would loosen the reins of poverty now bonded on so many people of our country. Cleveland and his congress convene and adjourns (to go fishing) session succeeding session, and how much better are we for that? None dear reader to my mind. How in the name of common sense can you and I be benefitted by congress issuing bonds to borrow money with when the gold is taken and locked up in the vaults, and kept there to pay interest on the bonds that have been issued before to pay interest on the third interest bearing bonds that may be due. At the present time the treasury is nearly empty. What will they do? Issue more bonds of course. No danger of them passing a bill through congress to issue greenbacks that could be circulated through the states by the much needed road improvement. No indeed this would not be of intrinsic value they say. But suppose we had fifty thousand dollars to spend in Clackamas county of such money, how much each and every one of us would be benefitted by this act of congress. We would have good roads, assuredly we would have better times. Never will we have good times until laboring people get work and get pay for the same. Then and only then we will have good times.

Bitner Thursday morning after his sermon appointed John Wise, Albert Frankhouser and Miss Emma Sturchler a committee to assist the one already appointed in making the arrangements.
