THE CLOSING HOURS.

The Last Votes in the Senatorial Contest—Scenes in the House.

The following graphic account of the closing scenes of the legislature and of the votes that led up to the final and in which an election was had for senator is from the Salem Statesman.

The hall of representatives, the corridors, the galleries and every other convenient space in the state house was crowded with humanity as it was last night. Public excitement had been aroused to such a pitch that persons remained at the hall all the afternoon and evening, accompanied by their lunches so as to secure favorable positions and seats. Long before the joint convention assembled every seat, chair, desk, railing, window seat and platform step was occupied, while standing room was packed like a sardine box. So soon as the balloting began the greatest possible anxiety was aroused. Arrangements had been made for transmitting bulletins to the secretary of state's office and thence to the masses in the outer corridors and upon receipt of each succeeding result the noise of the public discussion of its merits could be heard within the house. On the first ballot the Dolph forces were greatly cheered by the return to their ranks of Smith of Clackamas and Gowan who had left them temporarily at the afternoon session, and then the general belief was that the die was cast and that there would be no election. Through all the weary round of twenty-two ballots the crowd remained, the monotony being relieved at intervals by the "change of horse" at each "relay" of the anti-Dolph republicans. They led out for the race with Williams, but dropped him early for Judge J. B. Waldo, of Marion, who they left after two ballots for the younger and more vigorous steed, Fulton, to whom they attached themselves for ten laps but were compelled to drop him. The only accession of note to the Fulton standard was Senator Brownell of Clackamas, who broke from Dolph on the fifth ballot of the evening—The forty-first of the total. The next man selected was Tongue, but Mr. Brownell shifted to George W. McBride, as did Senator Hobson on the next and after five ballots without gain the anti-Dolph took up Governor Lord and two ballots were had as the clock pointed half an hour of midnight. The crowd was in good humor socially, as a few boxes of oranges had been brought in and scattered and thrown all over the house in boyish, sportive glee a short time before. Everybody was happy and the time was ripe for a crises. The opportunity was grasped by Cleeton of Columbia, who in a few well chosen words recited the well known conditions and his previous loyalty to Dolph, ending with the announcement of his intention to vote for George W. McBride. The roll call proceeded and the first representative from the Dolph ranks to step to the McBride column was J. L. Calvert of this county. The first senator to take a like step was Dr. Calbreath of Yamhill. Senators Hobson and Patterson and Speaker Moores also took their positions for Mr. McBride and when the roll call was completed he had forty-two votes or three short of enough to elect. Following is the vote as between Mr. Dolph and Mr. McBride.

Dolph—Bancroft, Beach, Blundell, Bridges, Cardwell, Carter, Conn, Daly, David, Dawson, Denny, Gesner, Gowan, Long, Maxwell, McCracken, McGinn, McGreer, Moorhead, Myers, Paxton, Price, Smith of Clackamas, Smith of Josephine, Smith of Polk, Steiwer, Templeton, Thompson, Woodard and Simon—30.

McBride—Alley, Baker, Barkley, Boothby, Brownell, Burke, Calbreath, Calbert, Cleeton, Cole, Coon, Cooper, Craig, Curtis, Davis, Dunn, Gates, Gowdy, Guild, Gurdane, Hillegas, Hobson, Hofer, Hope, Johnson, Key, Lester, Lyle, McClung, Mintie, Patterson, Patterson, Rinearson, Scott, Schlbrede, Shurtum, Smith of Linn, Stanley, Tizard, Wright, Yates and Moores—42.

The first to change his vote was Templeton, who mounted a seat and said he wanted a senator. He was followed by Smith of Polk, and he in turn by Bridges, who made the last one needed, but several others, led by Geo. T. Myers, also changed and the end was that Paxton's motion to record the republican 72 as unanimous for him was adopted on the second of Senator McGinn.

Through all these latter scenes joyful pandemonium reigned. Finally a committee was sent after the new senator, who appeared and made a neat speech of appreciation, promising the most faithful service for the state of his birth. Three cheers were given for Mr. McBride with such a vein as made the building almost shake. Then the crowd yelled for Fulton and that gentleman being found his appearance was the signal for the wildest and most hearty demonstration of the evening, except perhaps when Senator Brownell made his eloquent speech announcing his change to Fulton as spoken of above. Mr. Fulton spoke for a few moments in his able, manly way and assured his houseful of admirers that he was then happier in his life than he was then in witnessing the united republicanism of Oregon. He was cheered to the echo and at Speaker Moores' request, three cheers given for "the united republican party." Three cheers were likewise sent up for Speaker Moores himself.

Thomas H. Tongue was called for with such determination that that gentleman came forward with a few words of congratulation on the happy ending and words of cheer for the republican hosts again marching under a common flag. He, too, was heartily received and applauded.

Representative Barkley, the brilliant orator of the Marion county delegation, was called out and spoke in his usual pleasing way. He was in high favor with the house, for he had seconded Mr. Cleeton's nomination of Mr. McBride in a manner which left no doubt of his sincerity and that of the whole of the thirty anti for any acceptable republican, and that, as much as anything had made clear sailing for Mr. Cleeton's favorite. The feeling was so good the crowd was loth to separate, but a motion to dissolve the joint convention finally prevailed, and soon the platform was crowded with friends offering hearty congratulations to the new senator.

Geo. C. Brownell was true to his promises. He introduced in the senate a bill to abolish the railroad commissioner. He worked and advocated a constitutional convention. He favored giving all political parties recognition upon the election boards. He introduced a bill to place the legal rates of interest down to 6 per cent. He introduced and passed through the senate a bill to compel all corporations and manufacturing companies and institutions to pay their employees twice each month in lawful money and not script or store pay. He supported Dolph as long as there was any probability of his election because he was the republican caucus nominee. On the fifth ballot of the evening session of the last night when a senator could be elected he broke away from the Dolph forces and in a speech highly spoken of, presented the name of Hon. C. W. Fulton to the joint convention, and voted for him as long as he was before the convention. When the forces went to Hon. Thos. H. Tongue, Senator Brownell sprung the name of George W. McBride and was the first and only one voting for him for several ballots until all of the forces came over and elected him.

Representative George O. Rinearson was one of the youngest members of the house, but he soon was recognized as one of the leaders. His speeches were always to the point and commanded attention. While voting with the anti-Dolph faction he did it openly and courageously, and when the chance came for a vote for the man on whom all factions could unite he was the strongest and one of the first to advocate the election of Geo. W. McBride. Among the bills he introduced were some of much merit. Of these, to make ten hours a day's work on street cars; to give better protection to the salmon industry; to provide for the calling of a constitutional convention; to abolish grand juries; regulating the creation of new counties. His vote as recorded in the house journal was always for measures acceptable to the people and not for any class.

Representative Mintie, of whom much was expected, as he was one of our best speakers in the campaign, and being a man of good business qualifications, was seriously handicapped by a distressing and painful affliction to his eyes which rendered it necessary for him to keep quiet and have his eyes covered with dark glasses all through the session. He gave, as far as he was able, careful consideration to all bills before the house and his vote was always recorded on the right side.

Representative Smith having the only chairmanship of our delegation had most of his time largely taken up with the duties pertaining to it, yet he had time to vote on all important measures brought before the house.
