

THE CHINCH BUG.

The State Entomologist of Illinois Tells How to Fight This Pest.

In bulletin No. 33 from the agricultural experiment station of the University of Illinois Professor S. A. Forbes says: Economic measures now available are practically limited to experiments for the destruction of the chinch bugs by the introduction of their contagious diseases, and to the interposition of barriers between small grain and corn to prevent their passage from one to the other as infested fields of small grain ripen or are destroyed. To accumulate and kill them as they pass from field to field a deep furrow may be plowed—to be kept clean and as friable as possible, especially on the vertical side, next the field to be protected—and in this the accumulating bugs may be killed by a mixture of kerosene and water (about one part to eight) thoroughly and repeatedly shaken together. A variation of this method, used very successfully in Wisconsin, is to lay a quantity of green wheat or oats or fresh corn stalks in the furrow, in which the chinch bugs can be killed with this kerosene mixture as they accumulate.

An added measure of success with the barrier method may be secured if two parallel furrows are made instead of one and the soil between them be kept dusty. The chinch bugs escaping the kerosene mixture or other destructive agent in the outer furrow could then be killed in the second. If they succeed in passing those barriers and collect upon the outer rows of corn, they may there be killed with kerosene, which should then be applied in the form of an emulsion to prevent injury to the young corn itself. To prepare this fluid mix 2 parts of kerosene with 1 part of strong hot soapuds, and violently agitate the mixture with a hand force pump until a permanent cream or butter is formed. This may then be diluted with 10 or 12 parts of water and applied either with a sprinker or in a spray from a hand force pump.

A more expensive and less readily manageable method is the planting of strips of some favorite food plant, as spring wheat or other quick growing succulent cereal or grass, around infested wheat or around corn to be protected, where the chinch bugs may accumulate and be destroyed before laying their eggs for the second generation of the year. The bugs may be confined to the strip after having entered it by furrows plowed all around it and attended to from day to day until the destruction is complete.

For the benefit of those who wish to experiment with the introduction of contagious diseases arrangements have been made to infect and distribute live chinch bugs to farmers, the funds for this experiment having been furnished by the board of direction of the state agricultural experiment station. The results of this method are, however, not sufficiently certain to warrant an entire dependence upon it. Eleven years' experience with the chinch bug emphasizes the fact that it is not to be mastered by any one measure or any one man, but that joint action on an intelligent programme of preventive and protective measures persistently followed up offers the only valid hope of success.

Brown China Geese.

The color of this variety of geese is not uniform, but is in most instances brown, shading from dark to light. One peculiarity of the China goose is a knob at the base of the bill, and this has given it the name of the knobbed goose. It is not as large as the common goose. Indeed, when compared with the large breeds, it seems small, but as a compensation lays twice as many eggs in a season, producing 25 or more at the first laying in spring, and if broken up in its attempt to sit laying again and again.

Other geese are generally, though not invariably, satisfied with one attempt at incubation, and if frustrated in that will commence contentedly their long period of unproductiveness, except as we reckon the value of their feathers and gain in weight. But this comparatively small breed lays eggs not more than two-thirds as large as those of the common gray goose. The quality of their flesh is superior, and they fatten easily.

The Poultry World says: On account of their beauty and productiveness they should receive favorable attention from those in this country whose taste inclines them to keep water fowl, and this class is not as large as it should be, though it is happily increasing.

General News and Notes.

The executive committee of the Association of American Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations has decided to hold the next meeting at Washington on Nov. 13.

The census of the hay crop makes it appear that there has been of late years an enormous gain in the central states. Artesian wells are causing great changes in the agricultural prospects of Queensland, Australia and New South Wales.

No fruit is expected in the Piedmont and Ohio valley districts and but little in the Missouri belt. Prospects are brighter in the mountain and Pacific states.

The peach crop, commercially considered, is practically a failure. The condition of apples is rather better than that of peaches.

THE GUINEA FOWL.

Its Finely Flavored Flesh and Eggs Are Highly Prized by Epicures.

Guinea fowls are among the most neglected breeds of domestic poultry known in this country. As a marketable commodity the guinea cannot yet rank very high on account of the fact that but few persons have ever eaten them, consequently do not know or appreciate their merits as a table fowl. In point of fact the flesh of this fowl is of delicious flavor, being much like that of the pheasant.

Those who are fond of game or of poultry which has a gamey flavor will not fail to be abundantly satisfied with the guinea fowl, which is composed entirely of dark meat and which has retained through long years of comparative domestication the half wild habits which, it seems, cannot be effectually bred out of them.

The Poultry Yard says: Do not kill the old birds, for they make rather tough eating, but select the cocks between 1 and 2 years old—not older, as these have their full growth and are juicy and splendid eating when nicely roasted in a moderate oven.

The eggs of the guinea are very rich and of fine flavor, and what they lack in size is fully made up by the large numbers laid by the hens each season, though it is not the easiest thing in the world to find just where the nests are, even though careful and persistent search be made. The size of the eggs and the comparative difficulty to tell whether they are fresh or not until they are broken open prevent in a great measure their ever becoming popular in our markets.

Ripening Tomatoes.

It does not seem to be generally known that tomatoes do not require sun, but ripen best in warm, dark places. One can hardly pass along by country homes without seeing in the kitchen windows rows and rows of this delicious fruit in all stages of ripening—decaying, too, perhaps—for sunstrokes are common among the "love apples," and exposure to too much light and sun heat ruins them altogether oftentimes. An illustrated description from American Gardening suggests a simple plan for storing tomatoes while they are in process of ripening.

It consists of a dry goods box fitted with sliding shelves and a snug door. The closet may be large or small, with more or less shelves, according to the amount of the fruit. When filled, it should be set in a warm, moist place and inspected from time to time in order to remove any of the fruit that may have ripened before there is possibility of decay and consequent harm to the rest. The convenience of the sliding shelves is apparent here, as a whole shelf full may be inspected at a glance by slipping out the shelf. Darkness is the important thing, and the closely fitting door at once secures that, leaving only the necessary moisture and warmth to be attended to.

Boys vs Electricity.

"The Simple Story of How to Build an Electric Motor at Home" is the title of a serial now running in the Detroit Electrical Student. The story of how to build motor No. 2, and the battery to run it, told in language a child can understand, begins with the issue of March 2. Give the boys a chance. Electricity will be the biggest bread-winner of the 20th century. Perhaps your boy, if he gets a start, will make it his life-work. The Student is a crisp little weekly for amateur students of electricity. One dollar a year. Five subscriptions will bring the sender castings and material for one motor ready to be built, freight prepaid. Student Publishing Company, 33 Lafayette Ave., Detroit, Michigan.

In the fall of 1893 a son of Mr. T. A. McFarland, a prominent merchant of Live Oak, Sutter Co., Cal., was taken with a very heavy cold. The pains in his chest were so severe that he had spasms and was threatened with pneumonia. His father gave him several large doses of Chamberlain's cough remedy which broke up the cough and cured him. Mr. McFarland says whenever his children have croup he invariably gives them Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and it always cures them. He considers it the best cough remedy in the market. For sale by G.
