FALL SEEDING OF TIMOTHY.

Seed Without Grain—Nurse Crops a Hindrance to Grasses and Clovers.

In many sections the fall seeding of timothy will prove a success if conditions are favorable. First there must be enough moisture in the soil to sprout the seed and maintain the young grass plants. An ideal seed bed can be formed by plowing stubble land early and cultivating it every time the weeds have started well, coaxing the weed seeds to grow and then killing the young weed plants with the shallow cultivation. Fallowing for a few weeks in this way will firm the soil beneath and leave a fine seed bed almost free from weeds of an inch or two in depth. Timothy seed sown broadcast or with seeder and put in with a light drag will make a fine stand under such circumstances.

There is perhaps no part of general farming less understood than the use of "nurse" crops for grasses and clovers. Farmers ask, when recommended the sowing of clover and grass seeds by themselves, if the young plants will not burn up with the sun unless some grain, like oats, barley wheat or rye, is sown for protection. Let us look into this a little. Where one of these grains is sown together with grass and clover, one or both, the roots from the grain plant soon reach deep into the soil considerably below the roots of the young grass or clover. If there is plenty of moisture, both grow together nicely. If there is a lack, the grain roots being the deepest get the moisture, taking it from the grass or clover roots, and the latter plants die if the supply is cut off for any length of time.

The truth of the matter is, these so called "nurse crops" are a great hindrance to the grasses and clovers, and only when there is moisture for both do both succeed. We have never failed yet in getting a good stand of clovers and grasses when we have sown them alone in spring, while frequently both clover and timothy have failed to give a good "catch" when sown with grain, because the young plants died out in hot, dry weather. Thus writes Professor Henry from the Wisconsin station to Prairie Farmer. He advises for fall seeding of timothy sowing the grass seed alone. He says:

In sowing grasses by themselves sometimes weeds come up, drawing out moisture and shading the young plants. To check these run a mower over the field, setting the cutter bar high. The grass plants will soon gain a victory over the weeds with this treatment. Timothy may be sown successfully on well prepared land with turnip seed and a good crop of turnips harvested. This will only do where there is plenty of moisture for both and the soil rich and favorable. Good stands have been secured in a cornfield cultivated with level cultivation and timothy seed sown between the corn rows in August. Here, too, there must be plenty of moisture, and it is necessary to cut the stalks of corn level with the ground that they may not interfere with the mower next season. In many parts of the country timothy will succeed best when sown in the fall.

Valuable Grass For Arid Regions.

In a circular issued by the department of agriculture the Hungarian brome grass is described as being adapted to many sections. In light soils, especially in regions subject to extremes of heat or long periods of drought or where the land cannot be adapted to the growth of the finer and higher grade grasses, Hungarian brome may be recommended. It is doubtless valuable as a constituent in permanent meadows or pastures and may have especial value in the south for winter grazing. On lands where frequent rotation is practiced or desired its introduction should be made with caution, because it may there prove a pest hardly less troublesome than common couch or witch grass. At the Rocky Ford experiment station, Colorado, the Hungarian brome has proved the earliest and best grass tried. Professor Huntley says that there is no doubt about its making two crops per year. At the Arkansas valley experiment statoin in Otero county it has been discovered that this grass is a great plant for bees.

A Good Whitewash.

A good whitewash for fences and outbuildings that stands fairly well and which looks like oil paint when dry is made as follows: Pulverize air slaked lime until it is as fine as flour and pass it through a sieve. Next boil some rice until the substance has been drawn out of the grain, then strain it to separate the water from the grain. Mix the lime and rice water, and to every half barrel of the mixture add one gallon of linseed oil. Apply with a long bristled whitewash brush for buildings, and for fences use a brush with shorter bristles.

General News and Notes.

The agricultural earnings of the United States, according to Mulhall, are estimated at $3,490,000,000.

The United States is third in wool production. Australia leads, with 550,000,000 pounds annually; the Argentine Republic is second, with 400,000,000 pounds, and this country next, with 300,000,000 pounds.

The total crop last year was estimated by the American Cranberry Growers' association at 425,000 bushels for New England, 375,000 bushels for New Jersey and 100,000 bushels for the west, a total of 900,000 bushels.

The Cincinnati Price Current estimates that the acreage of this year in the United States is 3,021,000 acres less than last year, and that the crop this year will be about 443,000,000 bushels, a decrease of 28,000,000 bushels from last year's crop.

According to Bradstreet's, there will be less wheat for export from the United States during the year ending July 1, 1895, than for several years past.

An international exposition of fruit culture and products is to be held at St. Petersburg from Sept. 22 to Nov. 12 under the auspices of the czar.

FARM·FIELD AND GARDEN

WHAT ARE BUFF WYANDOTTES?

These Fowls Have Been Originated In at Least Three Different Ways.

The Buff Wyandotte is of much more recent origin than are the Silver White and the Golden Wyandottes. They are recognized, however, as a distinct variety by the American Poultry association, although a recognized authority, writing to Country Gentleman, says that "purchasers who expect every chicken reared from Buff Wyandotte eggs in 1894 to be true to standard description will assuredly be disappointed." The authority quoted tells of three ways by which these Buff Wyandottes have been originated:

First—By crossing the Golden Wyandotte and the Buff Cochin. The Golden Wyandotte itself originated in several ways—by a cross of the Silver Wyandotte and the Winnebago, the Silver Wyandotte and the Buff Cochin, the Silver Wyandotte and the Partridge Cochin and probably also the Silver Wyandotte and the Black Breasted Red Game. There is therefore, inasmuch as the Silver Wyandotte had a portion of Asiatic blood, a considerable percentage of the blood of fowls with feathered shanks in this strain of the Buff Wyandotte, and it need not be surprising to find many chickens with feathered shanks for some years to come.

Second—By crossing the Golden Wyandotte and the Rhode Island Red. Just what the Rhode Island Red has been produced from no one seems to know. It is a fowl of about the size of the Wyandotte, varying in comb, but usually single, and of a reddish buff color. It has never been bred to standard requirements, but has been developed on the farms of Rhode Island and vicinity with but the one thought of producing a good farm fowl. It is believed to have some Cochin blood and some blood of other breeds in its makeup. The shanks are for the most part free from feathers. The Buff Wyandottes from this cross are scarcely as large as those from the Cochin cross, but are, as a rule, better layers and have fewer chickens with feathers on the shanks.

Third—By breeding from Golden Wyandottes only, selecting each year those which showed the least black markings. This claim has been made by one or more western breeders, and it is possible that a strain of Buffs might in this way be produced.

But every purchaser of a new variety should not expect to obtain the uniformity in chickens that can be had from long established varieties.

Advice About Silos.

In an article on silos in The Country Gentleman the advice is given to put about 40 gallons of water over the surface of a 16 by 16 foot silo. This advice is given, says the writer who suggested it, because in practice it is found to be a good thing, for it hastens the forming of a blanket of mold over the surface that has not been equaled in the preservation of the surface layer of ensilage by any form or device of cover, and besides it is not a very expensive affair to apply. It needs to have the surface well trodden down—and all plans demand this—and then the third day distribute the water over the surface as evenly as possible. He adds:

Last fall we turned a pail of water in addition into each corner of the silo after treading it as fall as possible and did not lose a bushel beyond the light cover of mold that formed over the surface of the silo and did not exceed 15 bushels loss all told for a silo 15 feet square. My observations and practice confirm me in the belief that any cover on a silo is wholly useless, provided the surface is well tramped down each day for a few days, and the blanket of mold assisted to form by the addition of water. If water is not applied, the surface dries out so quickly that it fire fangs instead of forming the close blanket mold that proves so effectual a protection from the air. A second dash of water at the end of a week is not labor lost, we think.

The grand total of all bounties paid up to March 1, 1894, for all kinds of sugar produced in the United States was $19,230,806.30. The foregoing list of payments are as reported by the secretary of the treasury.

A Cheap Stump Twister.

A homemade stump puller suggested by Rural New Yorker consists of a stout pole 30 feet long, with a stout chain and hook at one end. Dig around the stump and cut off the roots. Put the chain end near the stump and hook the chain over one of the roots. Then hitch a team to the other end of the pole and drive ahead. This will twist the stump out, and you will be surprised to see how much work can be done with it.
