FRUIT RAISING.

Fruit raising could be made one of the profitable industries of Clackamas county if properly carried on, but as now handled it yields about as little return as any product of the farm. There are a few farmers who make money out of their fruit but the great majority of them by their ignorance and cupidity make dismal failures of the business. Their failure commences with the planting of the tree and continues with them until the fruit is marketed and a failure is experienced in the returns expected.

To begin with not half of the farmers know what kind of trees to plant to bring the best returns, or that there is a difference in quality, buying their trees of the first canvasser that comes along who offers to sell a little cheaper than the home nursery, regardless as to whether the trees are healthy or true to name. The numerous cow pastures and meadows scattered over Clackamas county in which a lot of forlorn and abused fruit trees are struggling for existence attests the fact that even after the trees are bought many do not know how to care for them. Then when it comes to marketing what little fruit they do raise it is that their ignorance, and too often times cupidity shows itself. No special care is taken in picking to prevent bruising, and in packing any old dirty box is used and the knotty fruit placed at the bottom and the fine, perfect fruit on the top and then they growl because their fruit does not bring the top price.

Fruit is a commodity that is sold largely on its appearance and the price is set by the manner of packing and by the poorest and not the best fruit that is in the box. A box of apples that has the bottom half made up of inferior fruit will only bring the price that such fruit sells for in the market regardless of the fact that the top of the box is made up of fruit that would bring a fancy price if packed separately. As an evidence as to what honest, clean, careful packing will do in selling fruit it may be mentioned that right here in Oregon City, Ashland and Hood River compete successfully with our own growers, the merchants having learned that when they receive a box of Ashland peaches or Hood River apples marked No. 1, No. 2 or No. 3 that it contains just the kind of fruit indicated and that the bottom of the box is of the same quality as the top.

When the fruit raisers of Clackamas county take interest and pride enough to see that their fruit goes to market in a clean, perfect and honest manner then will the greater part of their difficulties be overcome in finding a profitable market for the products of their orchards.

BRISK RIVER BUSINESS.

The prospects are that steamboating will be unusually lively on the Willamette this fall and winter. So soon as the river rises with the fall rains sufficient to allow the deep draft boats to resume their routes there will be a fleet of no less than fourteen boats running on the waters of the Willamette.

Among the boats to be put back on this run are some that have been tied up or off on other routes for the past year. The Oregon Central & Eastern Railway Co., whose three boats were tied up as a part of the Oregon Pacific property, will compete for the river traffic and are having their boats overhauled preparatory to going into commission. It is said that Jacob Kamm will place one of his boats, the Elwood, on the Willamette to add to the general rustle for business. There will probably be more boats on the Willamette this winter than ever before in the history of the river. The tonnage to be handled is unusually large and is the incentive that is attracting so many steamboats.

As the country settles up and the towns grow the traffic on the Willamette river steadily grows and in volume now nearly equals any river of its size in the United States, yet there are few rivers of its magnitude in the country that has had less work and money expended by the general government than has the Willamette. If the Willamette river and its tributaries were properly improved the traffic would be more than doubled and instead of having a fleet of fourteen steamboats plying its waters the number would be doubled and they could run 12 months out of the year instead of six to eight as is now the case, excepting a few light draft boats. This strong and healthy competition would be the means of saving thousands of dollars each year to the people of the Willamette valley in freights and passenger expenses and with the incoming of a republican administration it is to be hoped that the people's petitions and memorials will be heard and that the Willamette river may be improved as its importance demands.

INDUSTRIAL CHANGES.

The price of oats is now as low as ever known to farmers on this Coast and there is little prospect of better prices being realized for some time to come. Electric cars and bicycles together with a large crop are the causes responsible for this decline in price. The horses that heretofore consumed the oats are now many of them running idle in pastures, or have been turned over to the pound master to go the way of all worn out animals. There is little doubt but that the work of the horse will be still further superseded by the electric car and it rests with the farmers to adopt themselves to the changed conditions that now confront them. They will have to grow less oats and hay and more fruit and other food for human consumers.

The demand for human labor has been very largely increased by the inventions that have eliminated the horse from the transportation industry. Thousands of men are now employed in the great bicycle and electrical factories that have been drawn from the farms and other walks in life. Many of the older industries have been given a new impetus by the demands created by these inventions. The copper, platinum and other metals used in electrical work have had the demand for them more than doubled while the iron, coal and wood industries have been greatly increased by these new demands. These various industries have drawn thousands of men from other vocations in life and thus reduced the competition in labor and at the same time made an increased market for the products of the farm as well as of the factory.

So while the farmer is made to suffer by these changed conditions it is only temporary and with the adaptation of his products to the demands he will have even a better market than heretofore. In this line it is well to remember that the farmers as a class are not the only sufferers by the improvements that are constantly going on in the industrial conditions of mankind. The invention of the factory loom threw hundreds out of employment but soon gave work to thousands. The self-binder and threshing machine deprived hundreds of of farm laborers of work, but these machines soon created labor for these men in other industries. The type setting machine is decimating the ranks of the journeyman printer but these machines are the means of bringing increased labor to the iron and kindred industries. Thus every improvement hastens the death of some industry unit to survive while it creates many new wants and increases the general prosperity.

THE ENTERPRISE is in receipt of the prospectus of the annual horticultural fair that will be held at Hood River on Friday and Saturday, Oct. 4 and 5. This fair is conducted and managed by the fruit raisers of Hood River valley and the business men of Hood River. It is distinctly a fruit fair and the exhibits made, attract the wonder and admiration of people from the East as well as those from the Willamette valley, where a perfect apple is almost a curiosity. This fair has done much to bring into prominence the wonderful capabilities of the Hood river valley as a fruit raising district and to call attention of the dealers to the fine quality of fruit that that valley can send out. The success of such a fair as the Hood River people hold is an indication of the push and energy that characterize the people of that section and it will accrue to their advantage in more ways than one.

Good roads appear to be one of the investments that pay from the start. The first county in New Jersey to thoroughly improve its roads was Union, and the increased valuation of its property in a single year is $1,300,000. At Summit, N. J., the increased valuation is $419,000, or over 26 per cent. The Telford roads going down in New Jersey are pronounced excellent by all who drive and also by bicyclists.

SPIRIT OF THE PRESS.

People and newspapers can talk all they are pleased to regarding Salem, says the Eugene Register, Salem newspapers and Salem's "hogs" but it appears decidedly plain to the writer's mind that if other towns, other town's papers and other town's hogs had as much interest in the general welfare of their immediate vicinity and the entire state at large as has Salem, her newspapers and her "hogs," it's a dead open and sure thing that Oregon would take a tumble to herself before long. Salem is always looking around for something that will add to the building up of the town and vicinity.

This time the business men of that city are standing shoulder to shoulder with a view of arranging for a thorough system of advertising Oregon throughout the East. When Salem starts in on a thing of this kind she is pretty apt to make it go—at least to do her share toward making it go. A scheme of this kind is one that should interest every town in the state. Every town should take it up. The different boards of trade should take the proposition under advisement and open up a correspondence, acquaint themselves with the facts, and offer to appoint a committee to act with Salem's and other committees and do all in their power to get Oregon before the people of the East. Eugene should do this. Eugene needs new comers. It is the very key to her future prosperity. Here is a chance not only to do something for the benefit of your own city, but to advance the interests and the population of the state as well. Eugene's business men should look the matter up.

Apologies to the long standing complaint of the Oregon fruit raisers that their fruit that is marketed in California is re-packed by the California dealers and sent East as the product of that state, the Rural Northwest has the following sensible remarks on the subject: "There is a good deal of nonsense in the common talk about California taking credit for fruit produced in Oregon and Oregon taking credit for fruit produced in Washington. If California dealers buy fruit in Oregon they are pretty certain to put their own California brand upon the packages; if Oregon dealers in Portland buy fruit in Washington it will be sold under the brand of the Portland buyer; if the Walla Walla fruit dealer buys fruit in the vicinity of Milton, Washington, fruit. All of these things are done to some extent and will continue to be done, but the great bulk of the fruit will go to market under brands of the state in which it was produced, and neither state will acquire any general reputation by means of the fruit from other states which it sells under its own brands. Each of the states mentioned can produce delicious fruit of the highest quality and the general reputation of its fruit will depend upon the average skill and knowledge of its fruit growers. As a matter of fact the principal reason why Oregon fruit is sold as California fruit is that California fruit is better known than that of Oregon and so sells more readily. California is at the present time spending one hundred times as much money advertising its fruits as Oregon. If Oregon would advertise its fruit as thoroughly as California does no one would worry about Oregon's fruit being sold as California product."

Any number of men who run on a free trade ticket at the next election says the Florence West, will find themselves beaten because the people do not think much of such shepherds, or of the barren pastures into which the shepherds lead them. Sheep the people may have, but even sheep are apt to stray when they are driven up and down roads without a blade of grass, and are told that they are to be thankful for being taught an object-lesson on starvation.
