The way to build up Oregon City is to give Oregon City people your patronage.

THE BARTLETT PEAR.

One of the largest fruit growers in Placer county, California, is Henry A. Frost. He has about 5000 trees, half of them being apples of the Winesap, Newtown Pippin and Rome Beauty varieties. The balance are Bartlett pears.

A writer for the American Agriculturist recently asked Mr. Frost for his opinion of the future of the Bartlett pear. His answer as reported was: "Well, I think those grown in the mountains have a grand future. We can raise pears at 25c. per box net if we have to, and make more money than can be made in raising any other crop in California. We have a sort of monopoly in pears, as they cannot be successfully raised higher up, and those raised below cannot compare with ours either in quality or beauty."

No doubt Mr. Frost can raise very good pears on his Placer county farm, but if he would move into the Willamette valley in Oregon he would find that he could raise better ones, of greater beauty, finer flavor and more excellence generally. He would also find that he could grow more to the tree and the acre. The finest and highest priced pears in the markets of this country will come from the Willamette valley orchards. They can be profitably grown here at 25c. per box, but it is likely they will for some years command a higher average price than this. We believe the few thousand boxes that were shipped during the season just passed netted some 85c. per box. The market is a large and growing one, and shipping facilities are being improved and freights lowered.

If the outlook for the future of Placer county pear-growing is bright, the owners of pears in the natural home of this fruit have reason to be doubly encouraged.

But we believe the outlook for the future of all intelligent, industrious and thrifty fruit growers in this section is bright—that they will henceforth be one of the most prosperous classes of our people. We feel certain that when Mr. Frost and his neighbors get ready to assume their places as monopolists of the fine pear market they will find the Willamette valley fruit grower taking a higher place in the favor of discriminating buyers, and their selling as second class in competition and comparison. We cannot compete with California in the growth of citrus and semi-tropical fruits, but we can excel her easily in the best varieties of temperate zone fruits. Nature has given us the advantages. All that is required on the part of our growers is intelligence, care and hard work. These they are now employing, and they can but succeed.—Salem Statesman.

The longtalked of prize fight between Corbett and Fitzsimmons will not take place in Texas. Governor Curberton, backed by the law and order element in the state, knocked out their plans and made it so a prize fight cannot take place in that state. The governor gave notice that he would not allow the fight to take place in Texas, but as there was no specific law against prize fighting in that state, the fighters went ahead with their arrangements. The governor was not to be balked and called a special session of the legislature, and on Wednesday, within three hours from the time the bill was introduced, it passed the senate by 27 yeas to 1 nay, and the house by 110 to 5. As the act contained an emergency clause the law took immediate effect. The sporting element throughout the state made a big uproar, and at the time of calling the special session it looked as though they could bring pressure enough to bear to prevent the emergency clause from passing; but the old governor was too much for them, and through the courage he inspired, the law and order people rallied and saved Texas from the disgrace that was about to befall her. Texas can now take front rank as one of the progressive, law-abiding states of the Union, and its old-time reputation for lawlessness is now forever a thing of the past.

In freight transportation Oregon City is certainly one of the most favored towns in the state both as to service and charges. With eight steamboats making connections with all points on the Willamette and Columbia rivers, and the Southern Pacific railroad connecting with all the transcontinental lines, this place has enjoyed all the transportation advantages that could be desired. Added to these facilities for handling freight a freight car has been placed on the East Side electric railway between this city and Portland, making two round trips daily. And now not to be outdone in the general competition that is prevailing for the business of this city, the Oregon City Transportation Co. has commenced the free delivery from its boats to all parts of the city of freight consigned to its regular shippers. If the shippers of Oregon city desire any thing more in the freight line they should be given the earth, for they surely have a freight service that is the envy of all the towns in Oregon.

In reply to a correspondent the ENTERPRISE will state that the laws and the courts hold bicycles to be vehicles and that they are entitled to all the rights and privileges of the highway as well as to be subject to such restrictions as other vehicles are under. A bicycle rider on the road is entitled to half of the right of way, and drivers of teams are compelled to give it to them, unless it is a loaded wagon which always has best right over an empty or light vehicle. Ever since the bicycle came into use there has been more or less trouble in the rural districts by the teamsters insisting on the exclusive right to the road, forcing the bicyclists to take to the side among the stumps or in the ditch, and more than one scold has occurred with varying results to the participants. There are hogs among bicyclists as well as among teamsters, who insist on taking up all the road they can. But the majority of bicycle riders are gentlemanly and obliging and give to the teamsters the best track of the road. A little forbearance and observance of the rights of others would prevent all trouble between the teamsters and bicyclists.

The latest industry to file a protest against the bicycle is the cigar makers and dealers. They claim that since so many young men have taken to riding wheels their sale of cigars has very materially fallen off. The cause of this is that it is impossible to smoke while riding, as the force of the wind makes a cigar burn out at the side, besides bicycle riding does not give the indolent ease that a buggy does and the rider's mind is too much occupied for him to care to smoke. The liquor interest is also exercised over the loss to their trade by the coming of the bicycle, for it requires a steady head to ride a wheel and as a consequence the bottle is not taken on trips as it was when outings by the "young bloods" were taken in a livery rig.

It appears that of the 1259 graduates of West Point who were living when the civil war broke out, 821 were in the army, and 438 were in civil pursuits. Of those who had left the service, 292 returned to fight for the Union, and 99 entered the Confederate army; and of those who were yet in the service 624 remained true to the flag, and 184 went over to the other side. Out of 350 southern graduates, 192 were in the federal army, and among them was Gen. G. H. Thomas, the "Rock of Chickamauga."

DURING the year ending June 30, 1895, there were imported into the United States 14,352,000 pounds of prunes. It will thus be seen that even though the prune business be boomed ever so much it will be some time yet before the home production will equal the production in this country.

SPIRIT OF THE PRESS.

Fruit growers unions have not as yet been organized in the East, and as a consequence the growers by blindly dumping their crops onto the market, regardless as to whether a town is glutted or empty, are at the mercy of the dealers and too oftentimes come out losers. Of the recent glut in the New York market the World has the following to say: "Already the banana producers are uneasy and are sending deputations to study the reason of the low price of bananas. Shiploads of melons are dumped into the river to keep up the price. These are common signs of trouble. The remedy is apparently in the way of reaching the market that shall leave out the middleman. He and the transportation companies commonly make all the money, and the fact that they kill the trade does not trouble them. But to make fruit scarce and dear is to injure the people."

Judging by the following from the Commercial Review, of Portland, one of the leading commercial papers on the Coast, the outlook for wheat is not very bright and low prices may be expected for the remainder of the year: Numerous letters have reached this office in regard to the outlook for better prices in the wheat trade. All we can say is that the recent collapse in the wheat markets of the world is to be greatly regretted. A little earlier in the season there were hopes that prices would rule higher this year. The leading markets of the world advanced sharply and it was hoped that the higher prices would be maintained until the new crop of Oregon and Washington could be marketed. Unfortunately the "boom" did not last long. Prices soon began to decline, and now, just as the new wheat is being marketed, we find that prices are back again to about the low values of one year ago. The idea so firmly established in the interior that prices would be higher this season, largely through the press, whose writers understood scarcely anything about the market conditions, that the farmers and grain dealers do not seem to realize that prices have declined throughout the world. Instead of looking at the general situation, many seem to think that some local cause may be found for the present low prices. Consequently the local grain trade is blamed a great deal by persons who seem to think that the local men are accountable for the low prices. The recent "boom" in wheat was at its highest early in June, and altogether it was a short-lived affair. It was clearly traceable to a sudden arousing of the speculative spirit to a remarkable extent, and the collapse came about as sudden as the advance.

Of what constitutes a newspaper in the fullest sense of the word, and what gives it a high standing with its readers is discussed with all points on the Willamette and Columbia rivers, and the Southern Pacific railroad connecting with all the transcontinental lines, this place has enjoyed all the transportation advantages that could be desired. Added to these facilities for handling freight a freight car has been placed on the East Side electric railway between this city and Portland, making two round trips daily. And now not to be outdone in the general competition that is prevailing for the business of this city, the Oregon City Transportation Co. has commenced the free delivery from its boats to all parts of the city of freight consigned to its regular shippers. If the shippers of Oregon city desire any thing more in the freight line they should be given the earth, for they surely have a freight service that is the envy of all the towns in Oregon.
